

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

PREFACE

THIS edition of Caesar has been prepared in view of the tendency of many teachers of Latin, in accordance with the recommendations of the New York State Education Department for second-year Latin, to limit the intensive study of Caesar to Books I and II of the Gallic War, thus leaving for sight reading a wider variation of material to be selected from the remainder of the Gallic War, from the Civil War, or from the Lives of Nepos. It provides the material for thorough study of these two books and furthermore, as a preparation for the requirements of the College Entrance Examination Board, it will be found serviceable when used in conjunction with any collection of sight reading material, although it is specially designed to be used with Janes's Second Year Sight Reading.

The text is that of Meusel, revised on the basis of the Caesar Studien by Klotz. To aid in the important part which reading aloud should hold in the classroom, all long vowels have been marked, and to insure the acquisition of a working vocabulary, all words required by the New York City Syllabus, which is based on the Lodge list, have been printed in full-faced type where they occur first. These words are also listed on pages 263 to 271 in order of first occurrence for purposes of drill and review.

The notes on the two books are equally full in order to enable teachers to begin the reading of the Commentaries with either book. Our aim has been to make difficult points clear to the pupil without either unduly facilitating the translation or befogging him by elaborate grammatical explanations. The editors have regarded their practical experience in the classroom as their safest guide.

The introduction, for which we beg to acknowledge gratefully the help derived from Sihler's Annals of Caesar is intended to be assigned to the pupil for recitation. It should help him to understand the historical background of the work, to grow into an appreciation of Caesar as man and as a writer, and to form a clear idea of the Roman army as a splendidly organized machine of war. For the latter part Oehler's excellent monograph on the Roman army has been used as foundation.

The illustrations, while their artistic merit may serve well to attract the eye of the casual reader, have been selected with care to clear up, by objective representative points not readily elucidated in the compass of a note.

The editors are convinced that second-year pupils are not mature enough to profit by thumbing a grammar. Therefore, an appendix has been added which provides in simple form all of the Caesarean syntax required, illustrated by examples taken from the text. In this, as well as in the making of the prose exercises, the statistics gathered by Dr. Lee Byrne and his collaborators have been of the greatest service. A short outline of accident has been included, to enable the teacher to give during the year the ever necessary review in forms.

One distinctly novel feature is to be noted. While the exercises for prose composition follow a systematic syntactical outline, their content covers a connected narrative of the events of the two campaigns. The editors believe that during the second year students should be required only to render into Latin sentences that are reasonably short. But they hope, by the arrangement just indicated, that these sentences will have been made more interesting in their sequence than would otherwise have been the case.

INTRODUCTION

I. Caesar's Life.

A. To the Governorship of Gaul

1. Gaius Iulius Caesar was born at Rome on July 12, 100 B.C. His family belonged to the highest nobility of the city, tracing its origin back through Iulus, son of Aeneas, the founder of Lavinium, to the goddess Venus herself and incidentally, through this connection, to Romulus, the founder of Rome. In spite of this, however, the men of the family, for some generations before Gaius, had not held the highest office in the gift of the Roman nation, the consulship. Nor was that branch of the Julian house to which Gaius belonged closely allied with the ruling aristocracy. On the contrary, Caesar's aunt had married the great leader of the popular party, Marius, and this family tie was of marked consequence in shaping the political career of the young man.

2. He had hardly finished his early education, which had been completely under Greek influence, when — in 85 B.C. — his father died, just after the youth had been nominated by Marius to one of the highest priestly offices in Rome, the priesthood of Juppiter. In Roman fashion, he married very early, when barely seventeen years old. His bride was Cornelia, daughter of Cornelius Cinna, the successor of Marius. Thus his marriage bound the young man more closely still to the destinies of the popular party. Small wonder, then, that upon the restoration of the aristocratic power by Sulla he was one of the first to fall under the ban of the dictator. He was ordered to divorce his young wife, but with a courage extreme rare among his contemporaries he refused to obey as was proscribed. Only through the earnest prayers of his friends was the dictator moved to pardon Caesar, although with deep insight into the young man's character, he said to have exclaimed, "In this one youth there are many Mariuses."

3. Caesar thought it wise to withdraw from the eyes of the ruler and, in order to gain some military experience entered the Roman army then fighting against King Mithradates in the East. There he so distinguished himself by personal bravery that he received the corōna cīvic a wreath given to those who, at the risk of their own lives had rescued a fellow soldier from death.

4. After the death of Sulla, Caesar returned to Rome and became a prominent member of the Roman bar, distinguishing himself as a relentless prosecutor of aristocrat evildoers. Probably to escape the enmity aroused by this attitude, he took refuge once more in the East, on this occasion in the island of Rhodes, where he studied eloquence under the Greek teachers, who at that time were the chief glory of that commonwealth. During his journey thither he fell into the hands of the pirates who thronged the waterways of the Mediterranean. The story goes that while he charmed these men by his wit and amiability, he did not hesitate to assert, in apparent jest, that as soon as he should be set free he would pursue them and would put them to death. This promise he kept. His studies at Rhodes were interrupted by the renewal of the Mithradatic War. Out of his own fortune he enlisted some troops and with them held the southwest of Asia Minor, Caria, and Lycia, against the powerful enemy.

5. In 73 B.C. he again returned to Rome and became the successful candidate for the office of pontifex, a dignity in which he succeeded his mother's brother. In 68 he entered upon his political career, by filling the office of quaestor. After his wife's death, he, for a while, seemed to ally himself with the aristocrats, for he married Pompeia, Sulla's granddaughter. His quaestorship took him to Spain and he discharged its important financial duties with skill and devotion. Upon his return he supported Pompey, now his relative, for the command in the Mithradatic War, thus joining forces with the orator Cicero against the aristocrats. In 65 he held the office of aedilis, the duties of which consisted chiefly in supervising the grain supply and in winning the favor of the populace in the capital by lavish public spectacles. In 63 Caesar became the head of the pontifical College (pontifex maximus), and at the same time he was elected praetor for the year succeeding. He now declared himself openly the leader of the popular party. When, after the disclosure of the conspiracy of Catiline, the aristocrats had voted to inflict the extreme penalty on the conspirators, he had the courage to oppose these measures and proposed life imprisonment instead of the illegal execution of the defendants. After discharging the duties of the praetorship he went to Spain as governor. This province he managed with great skill, although not with exceeding honesty. On the contrary, he understood so well how to enrich himself at the expense of the provincials that upon his return he was sufficiently in funds to be able to pay off a debt of more than $1,000,000, and still had left an ample fortune.

6. On his return to Rome, Caesar found himself confronted by a critical political situation. Pompey, a man a few years older than himself, had, by a peculiar chain of circumstances, achieved great fame as a military comwith admirable energy Caesar raised first the militia, then a force of six legions, and succeeded in annihilating the greater part of the invaders and turning the rest back into Switzerland. The story of how, through this victory, was led into a war with the Germans, how the Gauls of the north, fearing for their independence, rose up in arms only to be defeated, forms the content of the first two books of Caesar's Commentaries; the remainder tells of the complete subjugation of France, the repeated invasion by the Roman army of both Germany and Britain, and, finally, the last great, and almost successful, struggle of the Gauls for their freedom under their brave leader, Vercingetor. When this man had finally been captured, Gallic independence was forever at an end, and Caesar could turn to more peaceful means of incorporating the conquered into the Roman Empire.

11. We can hardly overestimate the importance of the conquest of Gaul. For the first time in a century Rome ceased to face toward the east, and turned her aspirations toward the west, where she was destined to leave her abiding impress in the ultimate creation of the so-called Romance nations, Spain and France, whose languages still show the stamp of the centuries of Roman domination. Nay more, had not Rome, continuing in Caesar's footsteps, made the west her own, there would be to-day no Roman church and the world of western, that is, European and American, civilization would bear a totally different aspect.

C. Caesar as Ruler of Rome

12. Caesar was not destined to carry the pacification of Gaul to its completion. The alliance of the three triumvirs had been renewed at a conference at Lucca, in 56 B. C. Yet at the end of the five-year period for which it had been concluded, Caesar and Pompey had become bitter enemies. The death of Crassus, who in 53 had fallen at Carrhae in Syria in a battle against the Parthians, had made it plain that the question must be decided whether Caesar or Pompey should become the sole ruler. The former, as yet, gave no indication of the wide range of his ambitions. He demanded merely permission to stand again for the consulship while still governor of Gaul—an unconstitutional proceeding, it is true, but the Roman constitution had by now often been set aside—and together with this the renewal of his governorship for another five years. When both demands had been refused, the senate in subservience to Pompey tried to weaken his forces,—they demanded that he detach some of his legions for a pretended war of vengeance against the Parthians,—and when all peace proposals on his part had been scornfully rejected, Caesar took the decisive step. He crossed the little stream Rubico, which formed the boundary between his province and Italy, and thus began the Civil War.

13. Pompey, pursued by Caesar's troops, fled, first to Brundisium in the southeast of Italy, and later to Greece; while Caesar, preferring to secure his rear before pursuing, returned to Rome, established there a provisional government of his own, and then set out to defeat Pompey's lieutenants in the latter's official province, Spain. After a difficult but successful campaign; he returned, crossed to Greece, and confronted his adversary, first at Dyrrhachium on the west coast, where he was unsuccessful, and a few months later on the plain of Pharsalus in Thessaly. There Pompey was so thoroughly defeated that he took ship for Egypt, hoping for a refuge with its boy king whom in times of distress he had befriended. But he was treacherously betrayed by Ptolemy, and when Caesar, in hasty pursuit, color his narrative in such a manner that he appears to have been drawn into every one of his wars against his enemies. He seems to have undertaken them only to defend and to guard the Roman state and its allies. Yet, even his temporary expedients, torn as they were by conflicting emotions of love and hatred, bestowed unanimous admiration upon the charm of his narrative. The Commentaries, however, became popular in the way in which the great classical Roman literature intertwined themselves with the lives of the Romans. They were never used by the Roman schoolbook.

17. Space permits us merely to mention, in passing, that there are still extant other writings by Caesar, dealing with the Civil War (three books), the campaigns in Alexandria in Africa, and in Spain. The last three are Caesar's works indirectly, in so far as they are based upon his notes. The real authors are to be sought among the officers of his army.

III. Caesar the Man.

18. No book can claim to be great, unless in reading it we clearly discern the character of the man who composed it. Judged by this standard, Caesar's Commentaries justly lay claim to greatness. His character, both in public and private relations, is revealed in his writings. As a soldier, he was resourceful, energetic but cautious, persistent, brave, and always ready to learn both from his own mistakes and those of his subordinates or of the enemy. A relentless fighter, he knew, true statesman as he was, to temper severity with clemency, when by its means he might gain the love of those whom he had taught the superiority of the Roman arms. And yet, this man, who speaks of his mercy as well known, could punish resistance or treachery with a cruelty which seems a blot on his character, but which must be credited to the necessity imposed upon a conqueror who is far from the base of national support. He knew and loved his soldiers, and by strict but just discipline, as well as by indulgence at the right moment, he had ensured a loyalty and devotion on their part, which more than once won the day for him when all seemed lost. With all his tireless energy and devotion to duty he possessed a keen sense of humor and a gift of making warm personal friends, not only among his Roman associates, but also among the Gauls whom he ruled and conquered. Nothing, perhaps, is more marvelous than that, after eight years of incessant warfare, and only one year after a rebellion which had threatened to bury the conqueror amid the ruins of his conquest, he could leave Gaul, without fear of a new revolt, never to set foot in it again. In fact, a generation after the conquest the country had become thoroughly Romanized, and within a century it was fitted to receive from the emperor Claudius full Roman citizenship.

19. As Caesar stands revealed in his writings, so he is shown in his portraits, of which several have survived to our own times. The high forehead — he had early become bald and later loved to hide this blemish under a laurel wreath — shows the deep and clear thinker, the bold eye reveals the keen glance which penetrated and read the souls of men. The thin but sensitive lips betray the orator and the wit, but also the man who appreciated the good things of life, while the spare but lithe frame befits the soldier of many campaigns.

20. Such in image and in word Caesar stands before us, the greatest Roman of the end of the republic. Much hated and much loved, he has been made the object of immoderate praise and immoderate abuse, both among ancients and moderns. But, if his admirers have exaggerated his good traits no less than his adversaries have overestimated the faults of his nature, in one thing friend and foe and that is praise of general, the statesman, the writer. He stands as a solitary imposing figure at the portal leading from the republican to imperial type and model of ages.

IV. The Roman Army

21. Originally an army of the citizens in the field fighting in times of emergency but otherwise engaged in the peaceful pursuits of agriculture and commerce, the Roman army has undergone great changes in about two generations before Caesar's ascendancy. When, in the time of Marius, the citizens' army had proved insufficient to the demands of more and prolonged warfare, his great military genius had turned the army into a professional body, still nominally

ROMAN SOLDIER.

(Photograph of a model in the Central Museum, Mainz, Germany.)

cruited from among the citizens, but enlisted for a period of twenty years and thoroughly drilled in a rigid system of tactics.

22. The army consisted of infantry (mīlitēs, peditēs) and of cavalry (equitēs). The former was divided into soldiers of the legions (legiōnārii) and allies (auxilia).

23. The legiōnārius was a citizen, who by the oath of allegiance (sacrāmentum) enlisted for twenty years. This gave him the right to carry arms and the claim to wages (stīpendium) and a pension (praemia militāria). Caesar raised the annual pay of the private from 120 to 225 dēnārii ($50), of the subaltern from 250 to 450 dēnārii ($100). This was paid three times a year, and after deducting certain moneys for supplies furnished, the remainder was — at least in imperial times — invested for the soldier's benefit. The total saved, together with gifts on the part of the general and the soldier's share in the booty, was paid to him when he was honorably discharged, and in addition he received a special reward, either in cash or in the form of a land grant.

24. The unit of the army was the legion — theoretically 6000 men strong, but in fact generally numbering about 4000, divided as follows :

1 legiō = 10 cohortēs = 30 manipulī = 60 centuriae.

After eight years of service a legion earned the honorary title of legiō veterāna ; until then it was known, first as a body of recruits (tirōnēs), and then as newly enrolled (proximē cōnscripta). The legions were officially numbered throughout the whole army. The consuls commanded numbers I–IV. Caesar began with the seventh legion ; by enrollment he reached number XV, and at the last he also had legiō I under his command, ten legions all together.

25. The soldier was dressed in high boots (calīga), a thick shirtlike garment (tūnica), and a short cloak (sagum) fastened by a safety pin on the right shoulder. The tunic was belted to hold it close. In very cold weather he wore also a thick hooded cloak. His head was protected by a helmet (galea), ornamented with a crest (crista) of three feathers. On the march the helmet was carried over the right shoulder. He also had a leather cuirass (lōrīca) and a shield (scūtum), four-cornered and oblong, curved like a half cylinder. This shield was made of two layers of wood covered with canvas or skin, and reënforced with metal strips. The center was further strengthened by a boss (umbō), from which metal strips radiated to the corners, forming the representation of a thunderbolt. Leather covers protected the shield on the march and saved the labor of polishing. They were taken off immediately before going into battle. On the march the shield was carried by means of a strap, commonly on the back.

26. The weapons of attack were two. The javelin (pīlum) was about six feet long, of which one third to one half was formed by the iron point, a thin rod of iron with was of heavy wood. It could be fetched back, in case of a miss, by means of a leather strap fastened to its end. The shaft ended in a short pointed metal shoe, by which it could be rammed into the ground when the army camped. But the principal weapon was a short, straight sword (gladius), two-edged and pointed and used chiefly thrusting. Contrary to our custom, it was carried on the right side by means of a belt from the left shoulder to right hip.

PILUM. a steel head, while the shaft itself

27. On the march the soldier was burdened not only with his arms, but also with a large amount of baggage (sarcinae), several posts for the fortifying of the camp, saws, spades, hatchets, a sickle for the cutting of forage, a cooking spit, a pot, and a cup. In addition to this he carried a war ration of three days' grain, and on long marches, when the supply train was left behind, he carried 20 days' biscuit. All together he was burdened (impeditus) with about 44 pounds' weight. To enable him to transport all this, he was equipped with a forked stick to which the poles, etc., were tied and which he carried over his shoulder. The whole burden, of course, was always laid aside (expeditus) before the army went into battle.

28. The great mass of supplies, also the tents and siege engines (impedimenta), were transported with their attendants on wagons and pack animals, and accompanied by a large number of general servants (cālōnēs).

29. The army was also accompanied by traders who bought up the booty and prisoners, and by hucksters. These, however, were not allowed inside the camp and had to stop outside the rear gate.

30. The immediate command of the soldiers was in the hands of the centuriōnēs, heads of the centuriae. These men had risen from the ranks and could not attain higher position. The sixty centurions in each legion ranked according to the number of the cohorts, so that the six centurions of the first cohort — primi pilī — outranked all others and were privileged to take part in the deliberations of the council of war. They were distinguished by their uniform and by carrying a cane, of which they made a liberal use in disciplining the soldiers.

CENTURION.

31. Between the centurions and the privates there were several petty officers, among whom the standard bearers (signiferi) were the most important. They had to be men of great courage, since the standards, and especially that of the legion, the eagle, were looked upon as holy and their loss was an irreparable disgrace.

32. The staff officers began with the tribūnī militum, six to a legion and holding command in rotation, each for two months. In Caesar's army these men were appointed by him from among the young Romans in his suite, and were, therefore, not always distinguished for their military excellence. The great panic before the encounter with Ariovistus was started by these young men.

33. Directly under the commander in chief were the general officers, lēgātī, who were nominated by the Roman senate. Caesar, in the battle with Ariovistus, for the first time introduced the custom of placing them in command of a legion. At that time he had only five légatī therefore was compelled to place one legion under his master-general, the quaestor. The highest in rank among the légatī had the title prō praetōre, and commanded the army during the absence of the commander in chief.

34. All staff officers were distinguished by their uniforms chiefly by a red tunic, and by a cuirass made of metal instead of leather.

35. The commander in chief (dux) wore the paludamentum, a cloak of purple color.

36. The finances of the army were in the hands of the paymaster-general, quaestor, who was elected by the people while the engineer corps of the army was directly under the supervision of the praefectus fabrum, who in Caesar's camp also acted as his confidential secretary.

37. The auxilia, who were recruited among non-citizens, furnished the light-armed troops and the main body of cavalry. The foot soldiers among them served chiefly as slingers and archers, or were equipped with their native arms. From their usual position at the right and left wings of the army in battle line they were also known as ālāe. Caesar's cavalry consisted largely of Gauls, and after the first year, when Caesar had learned to appreciate their skill, of hired Germans as well. They were commanded by native officers under a Roman staff commander, praefectus equitum, and were divided into troops (turmae) of about 80 men each.

38. The bodyguard of the commander was formed into the cohors praetōria, a body of picked men who received 50 per cent more pay than the ordinary privates.

39. The army also numbered in its ranks musicians, v were employed to give the necessary signals. The instruments used were the tuba, a straight wind instrument, about three feet long, used chiefly for summons to attack or to retreat, a signal repeated for each detachment on the cornū, an almost circular instrument. The signal for relieving the watches was given on the būcina. Every evening after supper the classicum or "taps" was sounded, to mark the beginning of night service.

ROMAN HORSEMAN.

40. The soldiers, however, placed their chief reliance for the commands to be given in the standards (signa). Each legion had a silver eagle (aquila) placed on a cross-piece on top of a pole. This eagle, carried by the aquilifer, was in charge of the senior primus pilus and was always kept in the quarters of the commander of the legion. The cohort had no standard, but each manipulus had one, consisting of a pole topped by a cross-piece with ribbons and medals fastened to the pole. The auxiliaries, too, had their signa, sometimes known as vēxilla, a piece of cloth fastened to a crosspiece on top of a pole. Such vēxilla were also carried by any detached body of troops. In addition, there was a scarlet vēxillum, displayed over the commander's tent (vēxillum prōpōnere) when the men were to form under arms. On the march, the standards were carried in the van, but in battle they were placed behind the last line. In camp, the colors were massed next to headquarters, near a little chapel.

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

41. The battle order was commonly a triple line (acies triplex) for each legion, 4, 3, 3 cohorts. In each cohort the maniples stood side by side and in each maniple the centuriae behind each other, thus :

the intervals between the cohorts being equal to the space filled by a cohort. After the first discharge, the second line moved up into the vacant spaces and a single line of seven cohorts was formed, thus :

while the third line remained in reserve.

42. The tactics were always offensive. If possible, position was taken on a gentle slope, in order to increase the momentum of the charge. An address by the general (causatio) after the troops were drawn up (ad instruere) preceded the action. Then the countersign was passed along the ranks and the tuba gave signal to charge. First the soldiers threw their javelins then they followed this up with a sword charge, which was repeated again and again, until one of the two armies gave way. As long as the men retreated in an orderly fashion, facing the enemy (pedem referre), the victory might still be regained, but to turn around (terga vertere) usually meant a total rout. In an uphill battle soldiers often formed a roof of shields (testudō). The first line held their shields in front, while the others raised the shields over their heads so as to overlap each other. This formation was also used in storming a fortified position.

L'ESTUDO.

43. On the march the army was divided into a van (agmen primum), the main body (agmen), and a rear guard (agmen novissimum), while scouts and the cavalry preceded and followed and also screened the sides of the marching column.

44. A detachment of centurions and surveyors, under the command of a tribune, preceded the column at a considerable distance, in order to select and lay out the camp for the end of the day.

45. The baggage train of each legion commonly followed immediately in its rear, but when the army was the enemy, three fourths of the soldiers, sub sarcinīs, ceded, and one fourth followed, the train of the army. In these circumstances, where the territory permitted it, the whole body marched in battle line.

46. The length of the march usually amounted to a 12 to 15 miles (iter iūstum), interrupted by halts for There were also rest days. When speed was paramount forced marches (magna itinera) of over 20 miles: maxima itinera of about 25 miles, were resorted to, at critical times even night marches were demanded of the soldiers.

47. When the army reached the spot selected, the plan for each body of troops as well as the lines of the rampart and the places for the gates had already been marked by flags and the soldiers could at once go to work, building the camp (castra mūnīre).

48. Whenever possible, the camp was built in the shape of a rectangle with rounded corners. The earth for building the rampart was secured by making a trench and throwing the excavated earth to the inside. But timber for strengthening the rampart and sods to cover its surface had to be fetched from some distance. In the neighborhood of the enemy, this was, of course, done under the protection of a guard and the soldiers kept their cuirasses on. The posts which each soldier carried were fastened to the top of the rampart and formed a stockade, which was strengthened by wooden turrets erected at regular intervals. The gates, of which there were four, one in the middle of each side, were protected by a fronting rampart (clāvicula), which compelled all strangers to approach them with the unprotected (right) side facing the soldiers.

A space of 200 feet in width was left unoccupied behind the rampart so as to give free communication all around. The front gate (porta praetōria) was connected with the rear gate (porta decumāna) by a road 50 feet wide (cardō, via decumāna), which was broken at the center by the praetōrium and quaestōrium. As the camp was generally located on the slope of a hill, the road ascended from the front to the rear, thus making a successful attack difficult. About midway, the via decumāna was intersected by another road, 100 feet wide (via prīncipālis), connecting the two side gates (porta prīncipālis dextra, porta prīncipālis sinistra). On this street headquarters fronted. In the middle of the via decumāna was an altar, while immediately behind it was the general's tent (praetorium), to the right and left of which the cohors praetoria camped. To the right was the quaestor's tent, while in the rear were workshops and the guardhouse. Narrower streets divided the tents of the centuriae and the cohorts, so arranged that they stood back to back between the streets. In short, the camp very much resembled, imitated in the plan of a Roman city. The tents (pellēs, tentabernācula) were made of leather and housed each a company of ten men.

ROMAN CAMP.

(From plan of Novaesium in Germany.)

49. At all times the camp was well patrolled, in reliefs by day and in four watches by night, inspected by the tribunes, while on each side there were strong outposts (stationēs). When, in the morning, camp was broken (castra movēre), three signals were given: at the first the soldiers packed their baggage and struck tents, at the second the carts and pack animals were loaded, at the third the march began.

50. In times of peace, or in winter quarters, the soldiers were subject to incessant drill, both in marching and in the use of their arms. Maneuvers formed a regular part of their practice, and three times a month they were exercised on a practice march of ten miles.

51. The discipline was severe and the punishments (lashes, degradation, dishonorable discharge, and execution) were frequent and swift. On the other hand, merit was rewarded by public commendation, money gifts, promotion.

increased pay and rations, and by military decorations. The latter (insignia) consisted of wreaths of various kinds, among which the most highly prized were an oak wreath (corōna cīvica), given for the rescue of a comrade in the face of an enemy, and a golden crown (corōna mūrālis) for the man who first scaled the wall of an enemy's fortress. In addition, the men received medals (phalerae) which they wore fastened to their cuirasses (see illustration on p. 25).

SIEGE OF A TOWN.

52. In contrast to the field operations, which were carried on with great rapidity, the capture of a fortified town, unless it could be taken by surprise (ex itinere oppugnāre), slow and tedious process. First the ground was leveled to give easier access to the siege engines. This was done by huge movable shields (plutei). Then an agger or way was constructed of beams, stones, earth, etc. It commenced at a distance and gradually rose until it equaled in height that of the city wall. As it approached this, the soldiers worked under the protection of sheds of strong timbers on rollers, covered with hides soaked in water, so as to frustrate any attempt on the part of the beleaguered to set them on fire. When the agger had been extended across the moat, a movable tower (ambulātōria), several stories in height and furnished with artillery and drawbridges, was brought up, or, if the efforts of the defenders prevented this, the battering ram was brought into play. Such a ram consisted of a tree trunk 60 to 100 feet long, with an iron ram's head in front, which was suspended from the ceiling of a vīnea and swung against the walls by means of ropes. Until this ram had approached the walls, the townspeople might ask for terms of surrender, but after that the town, even if surrendered, was considered to have been taken by storm (expugnāre) and its inhabitants were killed or sold into slavery.

53. Where siege works were considered impossible on account of the difficulty of the ground, the still more tedious process of starving the town by a blockade (obsessio) was employed.

54. The artillery (tormenta) were used by Caesar for the first time in field operations, largely, however, for defensive purposes. They were of two kinds, according to whether they shot stones (ballista) or beams (cata), but were both constructed on the same principle.

were worked by means of twisted ropes (torques) which, when released, shot their missile with great force and as far as 300 feet. A lighter weapon, the scorpiæ, could be handled by one man.

55. The Roman navy consisted of two kinds of vessels, the galleys (naves longae) and the dispatch boats. The ROMAN SHIP.

galleys were open, rather long and narrow, and were propelled by oars, assisted by the hoisting of a sail when the wind was favorable. The rowers were arranged in tiers or rows, one above the other. The steering was done by means of sweeps, huge paddles, one on each side of the stern. The chief strength of the galleys, which otherwise were very frail vessels, lay in their ram (rostrum), a heavy piece of timber tipped with iron or bronze, at or under the water line. In an engagement the aim was to cripple the hostile ship either by ramming it or by bringing one side of its oarage by driving one's vessel over it. Roman galleys often carried collapsible towers with artillery in them, or boarding bridges. By means of the latter the galley was fastened to the enemy's vessel, and the vessel thus turned into one of military strength, in which the complement of regular soldiers carried by the galley generally proved superior to the sailors of the enemy. Scouting was done by dispatch boats (nāvēs actuariae). Merchant vessels (nāvēs onerariae) of all kinds were pressed to carry the troops and supplies where a landing on hostile soil was intended.

V. The Gallic Civilization.

56. The Gauls were by no means a nation of savages, though far less advanced in civilization than their conquerors. They were an agricultural people, and generally live in open villages or in fortified towns. Their houses were for the most part circular, with thatch roofs. Politically they were divided into a large number of tribes, which were governed by their nobles. In some instances they lived under kings, and often the great landholders intrigued to attain royal dignity. There was little unity among the tribes, which were jealous of one another's prosperity. At Caesar's time, however, matters had somewhat crystallized so that we may distinguish the three parts of which Gaul speaks, Celts, Aquitanians, and Belgians. Of these, the Aquitanians seem to have been least civilized; certainly they were of the least importance politically. The Belgians seem to have been bound together by a loose confederation, but this did not prove itself strong enough when the invader came, and the tribes fell one by one into his hands. The Celts were the most progressive of the three divisions.

Through long contact with the Greek settlers of Massilia, they had even acquired the art of writing, using a modification of the Greek alphabet. There were among them two factions, one led by the Aedui, the other by the Arverni.

GALLIC WARRIOR.

Both of these factions desired the sole control, but as neither was strong enough, they leaned on foreign help, — the Arverni on the Germans, the Aedui on the Romans, — thus furnishing both foreign nations the longed-for opportunity to conquer the country.

57. All the Gauls, including the inhabitants of Britain, who were related to the continental Gauls, had the common bond of religion, a rather obscure worship of several divinities, directed by a caste of learned priests, the Druids, and of a stern and forbidding nature. It was certainly disfigured by the custom of human sacrifices, which were made chiefly as burnt offerings.

58. As soldiers, the Gauls were brave and enthusiastic but they lacked the power of prolonged resistance. A defeat commonly sufficed to bring about the surrender of a tribe. They fought in a rude sort of battle line, a square (phalanx), often strengthened by a bulwark of wicker carts. Their camps generally were made in the form of a circle. They wore no protective armor, save a rude helmet made of the heads of wild animals, and shields of wicker. They employed several kinds of javelins (mastrāgula), and a long bronze saber for hewing. The tribes of northwestern Gaul, especially the Venetī (Vendée), were good sailors, skilled in maneuvering their sailing vessels. These were built with special regard to the nature of the rough sea of the Bay of Biscay, and for a while offered a stout resistance to Roman attack.

COMMENTARIUS SECUNDUS

Caesar hears of plots on the part of the Belgians. He recruits reinforcements.

1. Cum esset Caesar in citeriōre Galliā, ita uti suprà dēmōnstrāvimus, crēbrī ad eum rūmōrēs afferēbantur, litterisque item Labiēnī certior fiēbat omnēs Belgās, quam tertiam esse Galliae partem dixerāmus, contrā Surrender of the Ambiani. The character of the Nervii.

15. Caesar honōris Diviciāci atque Aeduōrum causā sēsē eōs in fidem receptūrum et cōservatūrum dixit, et, 250 quod erat civitās magnā inter Belgās auctōritāte atque hominum multitūdine praestābat, sescentōs obsidēs poposcit. His trāditis omnibusque armis ex oppidō col-lātis, ab eō locō in finēs Ambiānōrum pervēnit, quī sē suaque omnia sine morā dēdidērunt. Eōrum finēs Nervii 255 attingēbant; quōrum dē nātūrā mōribusque Caesar cum

BOOK I

CHAPTER I. — DESCRIPTION OF GAUL

Page 43. LINE 1. Gallia: the free Gaul, exclusive of the two provinces (Gallia Citerior, Gallia Ulterior), and comprising parts of France as well as of Belgium, Holland, Germany, and Switzerland.

omnis: translate by an adjective phrase; as a whole.

dīvisa: participle used as an adjective; hence est dīvisa = a present tense.

trēs: numerals commonly precede their nouns. The position gives emphasis to the word.

quārum: genitive of the whole (55).

2. Belgae, etc.: the subject follows the predicate because the latter is emphasized. The verb must be (mentally) repeated with Aquītānī and (ī) quī.

ipsōrum: instead of suā, so as to contrast it with nostrā.

3. linguā: ablative of means (85). Translation into idiomatic English?

Celtae, Gallī: predicate nominatives (49). All parts of Gaul were inhabited by men speaking Celtic, the ancestral language of the Irish, Gaelic, and Welsh languages. The word Gallī, too, is not Roman, but Celtic. It is the same word as the Galatians of the Bible. However, the tribes living in Gaul were not pure, but contained large admixtures of the original inhabitants in Aquitania, and of Germans in Belgium and Eastern Gaul.

linguā, etc.: ablatives of specification (95). Here linguā = dialect.

4. lēgibus: in translating insert and. In an enumeration the Romans either used no connectives at all or connected all the members of the series.

inter sē: from one another. One another is expressed in Latin by inter and the reflexive pronoun.

Gallōs: the inhabitants of Central Gaul, the most important neighbors of the Roman province of Gallia Ulterior.

6. dividit: the predicate is in the singular because the river and its tributary, followed from source to mouth, form one boundary line and so are considered a unit. See map between pages 8 and 9.

Hōrum: for case cp. quārum, l. 1.

omnium: in direct agreement with hōrum = of all these.

propterea quod: literally, for this reason that = because. To reach a satisfactory and idiomatic English rendering the student should reach a perfect understanding of the Latin idea.

7. quod: to be understood again before minimēque, l. 8, and et mīque, l. 10.

cultū atque hūmānitāte: the former refers to outward, the latter to intellectual refinement.

prōvinciae: Gallia Ulterior, which is Southern Gaul, the modern Provence. Greek and Roman influences had combined to give this Province a polish which was but imperfectly reflected among its neighbors.

8. minimēque: with saepe, literally least often. The Romans used parum, minus, minimē, with the sense of a negative. The phrase means very seldom.

mercātōrēs: Greek and Roman peddlers.

9. ad . . . animōs: this is not a purpose construction. Perturbare is regularly used with ad. Translate to weaken the character.

10. Germānis: dative with an adjective (70).

trāns Rhēnum: on which bank of the river?

incolunt: here intransitive. Above, l. 2, it is used as a transitive verb. The student should early train himself to notice the different constructions possible for the same word.

11. quibuscum: for the position of cum see 100, 2.

Quā dē causā: translate and for this reason. The Romans often used quā dē causā to connect their sentences, if possible. Hence, a relative pronoun is often used at the beginning of a sentence instead of a demonstrative pronoun. When a preposition governs a noun with a modifier, the regular Latin order is: modifier, preposition, noun.

12. quoque: postpositive. This word cannot be placed at the beginning of a sentence or clause. Other words of this character are autem and enim.

Gallōs: direct object of praecedunt. Very many compounded verbs are used with an accusative instead of a dative (65, a).

13. proeliis: see note on first linguā, l. 3.

14. cum . . . prohibent, . . . gerunt: this clause explains the preceding statement. Do not translate such constructions by when, but by phrases.

suīs: refers to Helvētiī, as does ipsī, while eōs, eōrum refer to the Germans.

15. finibus: ablative of separation (79).

Eōrum: refers to hōrum omnium, l. 6. Here begins a geographical digression. The main topic is resumed in Ch. 2.

ūna pars: refers to the country, not to the people. Translate division.

quam: object of obtinēre, of which Gallōs is the subject accusative. The words quam . . . obtinēre form the subject of dictum est.

17. Ōceanō: the Atlantic, the only ocean known to the ancients.

18. ab Sēquanīs: ablative of point of view (80); on the side of, etc. Latin emphasizes the place from which, while in English it appears more natural to lay stress on the place where.

19. septentriōnēs: the seven stars of the Great Bear or Dipper; north. The singular is used below.

extrēmīs . . . finibus: counting from the Province.

21. in . . . sōlem: northeast.

24. inter, etc.: northwest.

CHAPTERS 2-29.—THE HELVETIAN INVASION

25. longē: with superlatives measure is commonly expressed by an adverb, while the ablative is used with comparatives.

dītissimus = dīvitissimus: the order emphasizes the name (found on Gallic coins as ORGETIRIX = "king of the slayers").

26. M. . . cōsulibus: read Mārcō. Always use the full, unabridged form of Roman names. For the manner of naming a Roman see 175. The Romans dated their years by the names of the (two annual) chief magistrates, which were put in the ablative absolute (96), with or without et between the two names. Cōsulibus represents the noun part of the predicate, the present participle of esse being missing. Marcus, etc., being consuls = in the consulate of . . ., here = 61 B.C.

27. rēgnī, nōbilitātis: objective genitive and subjective genitive (54, 53). Test this by turning the phrases into sentences with active verbs, when the genitive will become either subject or object, thus:

Orgetorix cupiēbat rēgnum, nōbilitās coniūrāvit. In most Gallic the royal power had been abolished in favor of popular government but attempts at its restoration by the nobles were frequent.

nōbilitātis: notice that the suffix -tās here has collective force word meaning a body of nobles. So cīvitātī, immediately follow Translate nobles, citizens.

28. ut . . . exirent: a substantive clause of purpose, used as of persuāsit (145). Literally, he made it pleasant to the body of zens that they should . . .; be careful about the idiomatic translation. The verb is plural because with the collective noun the writer thinks of the cīvēs composing the cīvitās.

cum . . . cōpiīs: in military expressions accompaniment is commonly expressed by the ablative without a preposition. But it is questionable whether the word here has the military meaning.

29. Perfacile, etc.: infinitive of indirect discourse (164, b), because persuāsit indicates that Orgetorix said something. The subject of indirect discourse is the infinitive potīrī. Infinitives are of the neuter gender (114, a), hence perfacile. The per- serves to strengthen the meaning of the adjective; what degree might have been used instead? See 106, 2. In translating the sentence into English, supply it before perfacile as a merely grammatical subject.

esse: the present tense, because Orgetorix used this tense when speaking. But praestārent is in the imperfect because subordinate verbs, i.e. subjunctives in indirect discourse, follow the rule for sequence of tenses (158) after the verb of saying, persuāsit. In English a similar change of tense takes place with each verb: 'I cannot come because I am ill; he says that he cannot come because he is ill' said he could not come because he was ill.'

cum: causal, with subjunctive (132).

omnibus: dative with compounds (65).

30. Galliae: objective genitive.

imperio: ablative (of means) with certain deponents (86).

Id: direct object of persuāsit (64, c).

hōc: ablative of degree of difference (89) or of cause (83) facilius.

facilius: adverb.

31. ūnā ex parte: on one side; supply continentur. For case note on l. 18. The Latin idiom is also the reason for the use of digue, literally, from all sides.

32. lātissimō: for degree see 106, 2.

quī: agrees with what?

33. alterā: here the same as aliā in l. 2. What is the usual difference between alius and alter?

34. monte: singular, but referring to the whole range. In l. 23 the plural was used. Account for the gender of Iūra. The highest elevation is about 5000 feet.

35. tertiā: supply ex parte.

quī . . . dīvidit: only the part of the Rhone from Geneva to Vienna formed the boundary line. The lower (southern) course, from Vienna to Arles, was within the province.

36. fiēbat: supply it as grammatical subject. Notice the tense, which shows that the change was taking place during these years (62–58 B.C.).

37. ut . . . vagārentur: substantive clause of result (148), subject of fiēbat. The Helvetians were not a nomadic tribe, as one might conclude, but were slowly yielding to the constant pressure of German tribes in the north and east.

38. bellum inferre: distinguish this from bellum gerere. The former always refers to an offensive war.

quā ex parte: and for this reason; ablative of source (81), with causal meaning.

hominēs: as men; appositive to the subject of afficiēbantur.

bellandī: gerund in the genitive after an adjective (58).

39. Prō: in proportion to, for.

autem: see note on quoque, l. 12.

40. bellī: objective genitive (54).

bellī atque fortitudinis: for bravery in war. Caesar likes to express one idea by two independent nouns (hendiadys, 171, 1).

41. sē: subject of habēre, of which finēs is the object.

in longitudinem: accusative of limit of motion (75); and so in fortitudinem, l. 42.

milia passuum: i.e. miles. Mille passūs, 1000 paces of five Roman feet each, is one Roman mile (about 4850 English feet). The plural is used as a neuter noun with the genitive of the whole.

42. patēbant: the indicative shows that these measurements are added by Caesar. As the total number of Helvetians was 263,000 (Ch. 29), a population of 16.6 (or, if we refer 263,000 to soldiers only, of 83) to the square mile does not appear overcrowded to modern ideas. Modern Switzerland supports about 212 persons to the square mile. But undoubtedly much less land was then under cultivation and industrial life with its attendant crowding was entirely unknown.

43. CHAPTER 3. His rēbus: the facts mentioned before. Be careful about the translation of rēs, which rarely means thing. Its meaning must be taken from the matters to which it refers.

permōti: force of per-?

44. ea: object of comparāre, which is complementary (object) to comparāre (163, 2) to cōstituērunt; so also coēmere, facere, cōfirmare lines 46 and 48.

ea . . . pertinērent: the things required for . . . Latin sentences may be simplified by turning dependent clauses, especially relative clauses, into phrases. The verb is in the subjunctive of implied indirect discourse (159) because cōstituērunt is a verb of thinking.

45. carrōrum: a Gallic word (cp. our car), but early adopted by the Romans.

quam, etc.: see 106, 2.

46. sēmentēs . . . facere: to make sowings = to raise crops.

ut . . . suppetaret: adverb clause of purpose (123).

48. Ad . . . cōficiendās: to accomplish this end; a gerundive construction of purpose (169, 3).

49. sibi: dative of reference (66).

dūxērunt: notice the meaning of this verb when followed by a infinitive (of indirect discourse).

in tertium annum: translate for, etc.

50. cōfirmant: the narrative tense (properly past) is often changed to the present in order to give greater vividness (historical present, 116, a). So also in the following lines: dēligitur, persuādet, dat, prædant, spērant. As the sense is past, a dependent subjunctive may be used either in principal or historical sequence (occupāret, l. 55).

52. Casticō: "fair-eye."

Catamantaloedis: "just."

Page 45. 54. multōs annōs: accusative of extent of time (74). obtinuerat: be careful about the correct translation of tenses, in the use of which Latin is much more accurate than English. Cp. obtinuerat l. 58.

populī Rōmānī: an example of double dependence. The plural modifies both senātū and amicus; with both it is possessive. In translating, use a possessive adjective besides the noun: friend of the Romans.

nation by its senate. This was an honorable title bestowed by the Senate upon foreigners, both persons and tribes, implying a loose alliance. Do not translate populus by people, but rather by nation, so as to keep clear the number of the verb.

55. amicus: predicate nominative (49).

ut . . . occupāret: see note on l. 28. Distinguish carefully occupāre = to seize from obtinēre = to occupy, hold. It is always dangerous to translate a Latin word by its English derivative.

56. ante = anteā: adverb.

Dumnorigi: with persuādet, l. 52. Dumnorix, "king of the world."

The rivalry between these two brothers was destined to have far-reaching consequences in the events of the next five years.

57. quī: refers to Dumnorix.

eō tempore: ablative of time when (97).

principātum: not an official position.

58. maximē: with acceptus = superlative.

plēbī: dative with an adjective (acceptus). See 70.

59. mātrimōnium: accusative of limit of motion, because there is a change from the unmarried to the married state.

60. Perfacile . . . esse: infinitive of indirect discourse after probat. Its subject is perficere.

factū: ablative of supine after an adjective (170, b). As it has the same stem as perfacile, it need not be translated.

cōnāta: a perfect passive participle used as a noun.

61. obtentūrus esset: the periphrastic conjugation (43, 1) here denotes intention. Why is the verb in the subjunctive?

62. Nōn . . . quīn: the clause introduced by quīn (147) is the subject of the infinitive. Supply a grammatical subject, it.

plūrimum . . . possent: multum possum = I am powerful.

63. sē, suis, suō: the repeated reflexives emphasize the importance attached to Orgetorix.

cōpiis: not troops.

64. conciliātūrum: supply esse. The auxiliary verb of compound infinitives is frequently omitted.

inter sē . . . dant: give to each other = exchange. See note on l. 4.

65. fidem et iūs iūrandum: hendiadys, pledge and oath = a sworn pledge. See note on l. 40.

rēgnō occupātō: ablative absolute, showing circumstance.

66. tōtius Galliae: double dependence; see note on l. 54. It isitive of the whole with populōs, and objective genitive with ꝥ which is followed by the ablative or genitive (86, 1).

67. posse: this verb lacks the future infinitive, which should be with spērāre (157, 1).

68. CHAPTER 4. Ea rēs: see note on l. 43.

indiciū: abstract with collective force. See note on l. 27.

ēnūntiāta: what is the effect of separating this participle from auxiliary? Why is the prefix ē- used?

Mōribus: ablative of accordance (93).

69. ex vinculis: what preposition must be used in English? note on ab Sēquanīs, l. 18.

causam dicere: tell his case = plead.

70. damnātum: object of sequī, of which poenam is the subject. The whole phrase is subject of oportēbat, and means, literally, (it necessary for the punishment to follow the condemned man). Datum, however, is equivalent to sī damnātus erat. Translate upon his conviction, the established punishment would be. . . .

ut . . . cremārētur: explanatory (144) of poenam. What is literal, and what the idiomatic translation of ignī cremārī?

71. Diē cōstitutā: ablative of time when. Notice the gender of the singular diēs is usually feminine when denoting a fixed and appointed day.

causae dictiōnis: causae dictiō forms one idea, pleading.

72. familiam: be careful about the translation of this word.

ad: with numerals ad means about.

73. obaerātōs: men who had entered a semi-servile condition in payment for financial support. Distinguish between et and -que. The latter is much the closer connective. Here two classes of people summoned by Orgetorix; his immediate dependents (familia), people under contract obligation to him. The latter are again divided into clientēs and obaerātī. There is a striking resemblance of these relations to the vassalage and serfdom of the Middle Ages.

condūxit: contrast with habēbat. The latter is imperfect of deduction; the former shows a simple past fact.

75. nē . . . ēripuit: sē ēripuit = impedivit; therefore the nē construction (147).

76. armis: ablative of means, with exsequi.

iūs: viz., to punish criminals.

cōnārētur, cōgerent: the subjunctive shows that this is circumstantial (129). Distinguish between cum = when, showing the time of an event (indicative), and cum = when, showing in what circumstances the action occurs (subjunctive).

multitudinem: a levy of militia in times of disturbance.

78. ut . . . arbitrantur: ut with the indicative means (1) as, (2) when, as soon as, (3) because. What is its meaning with the subjunctive?

79. quā . . . cōnsciverit: neque abest suspiciō is almost equivalent to nōn est dubium. See note on l. 62.

ipse sibi: he himself to himself. Notice the difference between the intensive ipse, himself, and the reflexive. In English we may omit the ipse. What would be a good English translation for mortem sibi cōnsciscere?

80. CHAPTER 5. nihilō: by nothing the less = nevertheless; ablative of degree of difference.

id . . . cōstituerant: turn into a phrase, object of facere; their purpose, etc.

81. cōnantur: for the present tenses in this chapter see note on cōnfīrmant, l. 50.

ut . . . exeant: substantive clause of purpose, appositive to id quod. Insert namely.

82. Ubi: expressions of place are often used with regard to time.

83. numerō: ablative of specification.

84. reliqua: not the rest of.

privāta aedificia: isolated houses outside of towns and villages; farmhouses.

85. praeter quod: supply id.

combūrunt: distinguish between this word and incendunt, l. 84. Can the difference be illustrated by English derivatives?

domum . . . sublātā: an ablative absolute of circumstance. Domum reditiōnis spē forms one idea, hope of returning home. Reditiōnis is objective genitive with spē; domum is accusative of limit of motion (75. 1) with reditiōnis, a noun formed from a verb and retaining verbal force.

86. sublātā: from tollō.

ad . . . subeunda: see note on ad . . . cōnficiendās, l. 48.

87. essent: purpose clause.

mēnsium: genitive of measure (57, a); translate by for. All about 1 bushel a man per month, the load to be transported weighed at least 16,000 tons, and must have required no fewer than that number of animals for transporting.

sibi: dative of reference.

88. quemque: this word, if possible, is always placed next reflexive.

domō: see 78, 1.

Rauracīs, etc.: these tribes lived to the northeast, between the Rhine and Lake Constance. Rauracī, "masters"; Tulingī and Latobri "mountaineers."

89. utī: notice the short u and distinguish from ūtī, to use.

ūsī: translate as if ut ūtantur. Similarly, exustīs = ut exurant.

90. oppidīs . . . exustīs: appositive to cōnsiliō.

cum iīs: we should expect sēcum.

91. Bōiōsque: "the terrors." It is the object of asciscunt. Boii lived north of the Rhine and were trying to escape the pressure of the Germans by moving eastward into Styria and Carinthia (Noric). The name survives in the word Bohemia.

92. Nōrēiam: the present Neumarkt in Styria.

oppugnābant: contrast this tense with trānsierant and use an appropriate translation.

receptōs ad sē: appositive to Bōiōs.

93. sociōs: predicate accusative with asciscunt (73, c).

sibi: dative with compound verbs (65). Literally, attach to themselves; freely, receive as their.

94. CHAPTER 6. Erant: esse meaning exist is placed at the beginning of the sentence.

itineribus: the repetition of the antecedent in the relative clause belongs to the formal, especially the legal language. It shows the influence of Caesar's law studies upon his style. The case is ablative of means, regularly employed to denote the way by which one proceeds.

95. possent: characteristic relative clause (125, a); roads of such a kind that . . . They might have crossed the Rhine to the north but they did not, for they had already made their way through Alsace, but that would have meant a conflict with the Germans, whom they wanted to escape.

per Sēquanōs: the people, instead of their country; insert the and of.

96. inter, etc.: on the right bank through the Pas de L'Écluse, where the Rhone passes through a narrow defile. See map facing p. 48.

singulī: one each = single file. See 24.

97. dūcerentur: see note on possent, l. 95. Insert could.

98. facile: adverb.

perpaucī: force of the prefix ?

possent: subjunctive of result.

per, etc.: on the left bank of the river.

99. multō: ablative of degree of difference.

100. Allobrogum: "settlers on foreign soil," i.e. in the Province.

101. nūper: 62 B.C.

locīs: when locus is accompanied by a modifier, no preposition is used.

102. trānsitur: is crossed (again and again) = can be crossed.

103. finibus: with proximum (70).

104. sēsē: i.e. the Helvetians.

Page 47. 105. bonō animō: descriptive ablative (94, 1) with esse understood.

in populum: accusative of the person toward whom the feeling is directed.

106. vidērentur: subjunctive of indirect discourse with exīstimābant.

coāctūrōs: the object (eōs) is not expressed.

ut . . . paterentur: object of both persuāsūrōs and coāctūrōs. With latter the infinitive is more common.

107. suōs: i.e. Allobrogum.

eōs: i.e. Helvētiōs.

108. diem dīcunt: a law phrase, appoint a day.

diē: for use of the word see note on itineribus, l. 94. For gender see note on l. 71.

109. convenient: relative clause of purpose (123, 4).

diēs: masculine, because it is a calendar date.

a.d.: for the Roman way of reckoning time see 173, 174. Owing the confusion of the Roman calendar at that time, the date cannot be fixed with certainty. It probably coincided with the spring equinox, favorite date for such assemblies.

110. L. Pisōne: see note on l. 26. Piso was Caesar's father-in-law. The year was 58 B.C., the time of the present narrative.

111. CHAPTER 7. Caesarī: indirect object of nūntiātum (circumstantial cum clause), placed before its clause (anticipate center attention on the hero).

id: explained by eōs . . . cōnārī, an appositive to id. In trans the infinitive construction insert namely.

112. facere: object (complementary) infinitive with cōnārī. C is infinitive of a progressive present.

mātūrat: this verb is never followed by the place to which.

ab urbe: which was the only city for a Roman? Caesar, as consul, had been near Rome, which a magistrate with military mand was forbidden to enter; therefore ab, not ex.

113. quam maximis: see 106, 2; the plural, because a long 1 is made every day.

itineribus: see note on first linguā, l. 3.

114. ad Genavam: for use of preposition see 75, 1, a.

pervenit: force of per-?

Prōvinciae: indirect object of imperat. The direct object is num. Translate levies upon.

116. erat: indicative, because it is a geographical note of Caesar.

117. rescindī: iubeō is followed by an infinitive in indirect course. When the person commanded is named, the infinitive active; otherwise it is passive.

Ubi: see note on l. 82.

certiōrēs factī: see Vocabulary, certus.

118. lēgātōs: appositive to nōbilissimōs.

119. cuius lēgātiōnis: lēgātiōnis is antecedent of cuius. It is positive to nōbilissimōs, but has been incorporated into the relative clause and put in the same case as the relative.

Nammēius: "son of Nammus."

Verucloetius: "far-famed."

principem: words like prīnceps, dux, rēx, are often used as adjectives.

120. quī dīcerent: relative clause of purpose. The infinitive and rogāre depend, as indirect discourse, on this dīcerent.

sibi: i.e. Helvētiīs, possessive dative (68); literally, they had in mind = they intended. That which is in their mind (facere) is the subject of esse.

122. nūllum: emphasized by its position. How does English emphasize a negative?

rogāre: supply sē; used with ut . . . liceat as object clause of purpose. Notice the irregular sequence of liceat.

eius: i.e. Caesaris. The fullness of the expression, it might be allowed to them to march with his consent, is peculiar to the language of diplomacy. Translate freely, that he would consent to their marching.

123. L. Cassium cōsulem: 107 B.C.

124. occisum, pulsum, missum, concēdendum: supply esse.

125. sub iugum: as a sign of disgrace, a surrendered army was sometimes forced to march through a gate (iugum) made of a spear laid horizontally over two spears fastened in the ground and so low that the soldiers had to bow their heads to pass. Cp. subjugate.

concēdendum: with esse understood, infinitive of the second periphrastic (43). An example of the impersonal use of the passive, employed by the Romans when they wished to leave the doer of an action indefinite (115). Translate he ought not to give his permission.

126. hominēs: subject of temperātūrōs. Supply sibi esse.

animō: descriptive ablative.

datā facultāte: ablative absolute = a condition.

127. itineris faciundī: the genitive is objective with facultāte; faciundī = faciendī.

128. dum: with subjunctive it means until.

129. quōs: see note on prōvinciae, l. 114.

130. diem: here of indefinite time.

ad dēliberandum: gerund construction of purpose (169, 3).

quid: instead of aliquid (112, 2).

131. Id.: see 172, c, 3.

revertentur: the subjunctive is used because an imperative, when reported, is changed to the third person of the subjunctive. Caesar said, sī quid vultis, revertimini.

132. CHAPTER 8. legiōne, militibus: ablatives of means.

133. quī . . . influit: we should say that the lake has its outlet in the river.

Page 48. 135. mīlia: accusative of extent of space (74).

136. mūrū: Caesar exaggerates. In reality he only fortified level places and increased the slope of the river bank.

fossamque: as there was a fixed ratio of about 3: 2 between width of trench and height of rampart, only one measurement need be given.

perducit: because the work progresses as if one draws a line with the ruler.

137. dispōnit: note the force of dis-, at intervals.

castella: these were at some distance behind the rampart and for the reserves for the sentinels on it. From them the troops, when needed, were summoned by a signal.

commūnit: note the force of com-; see Vocabulary.

138. quō: regularly used with a comparative instead of ut to express purpose. The case is ablative of degree of difference.

sē invitō: ablative absolute; he being unwilling = against his.

cōnentur: subjunctive of (implied) indirect discourse, giving reason in Caesar's mind and representing an original future indication.

139. diēs: see note on l. 71.

vēnit: ubi = when is regularly used with the perfect indicative, regardless of the time of the narrative. In past time we must use the pluperfect.

140. negat . . . posse: says that he cannot. Negāre regularly takes the infinitive dīcere nōn.

mōre: ablative of accordant (93).

mōre et exemplō: hendiadys, established precedent (171, 1).

141. iter: permission to march.

ullī: usually an adjective; the pronoun is quisquam. Both are used only in negative sentences.

142. cōnentur: subjunctive of indirect discourse instead of indicative. Notice the sequence and see note on cōnfīrmant, prohibītūrum: supply sē esse.

Helvētīi: subject of dēstitērunt, l. 147. Aliī, l. 144, is appositive to Helvētīi. We should expect an aliī also before nāvibus (some others) but it is omitted to show that the greater number used is the main subject.

143. spē: ablative of separation (79). Translate thrown from = disappointed in.

nāvibus . . . factīs: not ablative absolute, but ablative of means. Boats were fastened together and covered with boards so as to serve as a flatboat ferry.

144. quā: adverb.

minima: predicate adjective.

145. interdiū, noctū: adverbs, instead of the ablative of the nouns diēs, noctis. sī . . . possent: object clause (indirect question) after a verb of trying, regularly introduced by sī (151).

146. mūnitiōne: ablative of means. Notice the order: the rampart is the first obstacle; then, at the alarm given by the sentinels, soldiers come from the castella and, by a hail of missiles, drive the invaders back.

147. cōnātū: ablative of separation. Study carefully the arrangement of this sentence so as to understand how Latin develops a periodic structure. The principal fact, Helvētiī dēstitērunt, opens and closes the sentence. The modifiers of this idea are given in the order in which they occur in time: the Helvetians are disappointed in their hope for a peaceable arrangement; many build ferries; others cross the shoals; this is done repeatedly, both by day and by night; they try to rush the fortifications; the alarm is given; the reserves rush up and hurl their weapons; the enemy are beaten back; finally, they give up.

148. CHAPTER 9. Relinquēbātur: the emphatic position of the verb may be kept in English by using the adverb there.

Sēquanīs: ablative absolute. See note on l. 138.

149. angustiās: the Pas de L'Écluse. See note on l. 96.

cum . . . possent: a causal clause (132).

150. Dumnorigem: see note on l. 56.

151. eō dēprecātōre: ablative absolute, with dēprecātōre as predicate noun, denoting means; through him as mediator.

152. grātiā: ablative of cause (83).

153. Helvētiīs: see 70.

154. filiām: see l. 59.

in mātirimōnium dūxerat: see Vocabulary, mātirimōnium. For case see note on l. 59.

155. rēgnī: objective genitive with cupiditāte.

novīs rēbus: dative of indirect object with studēre. See Vocabulary,

156. habēre obstrictās: habeō with perfect passive participle shows that the effect of the action lasts after its completion. Translate habeō keep.

157. rem: the mediation.

impetrat: the clause ut . . . patiantur is its object, while the clause obsidēsque . . . dent is the object of perficit.

158. obsidēs: object of dent but placed before the -que (anticipation).

159. Sēquani, Helvētiī: supply obsidēs dant.

nē . . . prohibeant, ut . . . trānseant: these clauses explain the purpose of the exchange of hostages. Insert pledging themselves fore nē.

161. CHAPTER 10. renūtiātur: force of prefix?

Helvētiis, etc.: see note on l. 120.

per agrum: for this whole passage study the map of Gaul. Santones lived on the right bank of the Garonne, near its mouth. region is to-day called Saintonge.

163. nōn longē: really about 100 miles.

Tolōsātium: to-day Toulouse.

quae civitās: see note on cuius lēgatiōnis, l. 119.

164. Id: i.e. the Helvetian settlement.

sī fieret: subjunctive of indirect discourse, representing an original future indicative.

magnō, etc.: ablative of manner or attendant circumstance.

ut . . . habēret: prōvincia (understood from prōvinciae) is subject of the clause, hominēs its object, fīnitimōs predicate accusative.

166. populī: note the case and see note on Helvētiis, l. 116. Inimicōs is used as a noun.

locis: dative with an adjective (70).

patentibus: not protected by natural boundaries.

maximēque frūmentāriis: adjectives in -ārius can be compared only by magis and maximē.

167. mūnitiōnī: indirect object of praeficit.

168. Labiēnum: the most trusted and most prominent of Caesar's assistants. Later on, during the Civil War, he became Caesar's bitterest enemy.

lēgātum: a Roman governor was accompanied by one trusted assistant or more, appointed by the Senate on his recommendation. These assistants served at his pleasure, either with or without fixed command, and represented him in his absence. Distinguish the word from this meaning from lēgātus = envoy.

169. Italiam: Hither Gaul, which by this time began to be reckoned as part of Italy.

contendit: cp. with mātūrat, l. 112.

170. Aquilēiam: on the northern coast of the Adriatic, defend Italy against attacks from the northeast.

172. per Alpēs: these roads were used only by traders. Armies commonly followed the west coast of Italy along the sea.

173. Ibi: i.e. in Alpibus.

Graioceli et Caturigēs: "the victors of Ocelum" and "the chiefs of battle"; thus the names reveal the warlike character of these tribes.

175. Complūribus, etc.: arrange thus: hīs pulsīs (ablative absolute) complūribus proeliīs (ablative of means).

ab Ocelō: see 78, 1, a.

176. prōvinciae: possessive genitive; translate by in.

182. CHAPTER 11. trādūxerant, pervēnerant: contrast the tense with populābantur, l. 183, and express the difference in the translation.

183. Aeduī: for position see note on Caesarī, l. 111.

cum . . . possent: see note on l. 149.

184. suaque: the neuter plural of the adjective is used as a noun; their belongings.

185. rogātum: accusative of the supine used after a verb of motion to express purpose (170, a). Auxilium is its object.

Ita sē, etc.: indirect discourse, depending on the idea of speaking implied in rogātum.

Omni tempore: ablative of time when. Tempus here means occasion, crisis.

186. meritōs esse: such had been their zeal for.

ut . . . dēbuerint: result clause. Notice the sequence. In result clauses a perfect subjunctive is often substituted for an imperfect, to mark the result as final or decisive (122, b).

187. vāstārī: complementary to dēbuerint. Notice the tense. Since in English ought, must show no difference between past and present tense, past action must be expressed by the complementary infinitive: he ought to come, he ought to have come. In Latin these verbs have a complete conjugation and carry the burden of expressing the time. Hence the complementary infinitive is always in the present tense: venire dēbet, venire dēbuit.

188. expugnārī: distinguish between pugnāre, oppugnāre, expugnāre.

Ambarī: "the settlers around the Arar."

189. necessārī, etc.: hendiadys, near kinsmen.

190. dēpopulātis: the perfect passive participle of deponents is often used with passive force.

nōn facile: adverb. Turn into a phrase with infinitive: they trouble in keeping.

ab: contrast the use of the preposition here with that of itiner l. 159.

192. trāns: on the north bank of the river. Caesar gives many reasons, because he really had overstepped the limits of his assignment by leaving his province.

fugā: ablative of means, though it impresses us as manner. Translate by in.

193. sibi: possessive dative (68).

194. solum: notice the quantity of the o and distinguish from sōlus, -a, -um.

reliquī: genitive of the whole with nihil (55).

195. sibi: supply esse. For case see 67.

dum: with subjunctive, until (127, c).

Page 50. 196. Santonōs: what is the nominative? See Santonum, l. 162. In using foreign proper names the Romans sometimes varied the declension.

198. CHAPTER 12. est: force of the position of the verb?

Arar: "the slow river," later called Saucona, whence the modern Saône.

199. lēnitāte: ablative of description.

200. fluat: subjunctive of indirect question. This clause is subject of iūdicārī, complementary infinitive to the subjunctive result, possit.

Id: object of trānsībant. Intransitives frequently become transitive by composition.

201. ratibus, etc.: see note on l. 143.

trānsībant: use progressive conjugation.

202. explōrātōrēs: regular troops used for reconnoitering, chiefly cavalry recruited from among the Gauls.

trēs partēs: three fourths.

partēs, flūmen: both objects of trādūxisse, of which Helvētiōs is subject. For case see 73, 2.

203. quārtam . . . partem: one fourth.

204. Ararim: cp. with Arar, l. 198, and Ararī, l. 221. Also note on l. 196.

205. cum legiōnibus : see note on l. 28.

207. impeditōs : translate by while.

208. mandārunt = mandāvērunt.

in . . . abdidērunt : they (fled into and) hid in, etc.

210. Tigurīnus : on Lake Murten.

211. Hīc, etc. : Caesar tries to justify his butchery by representing it as a providential revenge for the disgraceful defeat of the Romans in 107 B.C.

cum . . . exisset : cum clause of circumstance.

212. memoriā : ablative of time when.

213. cāsū : ablative of cause.

214. quae pars : the noun, really belonging with ea (l. 215) as antecedent of quae, is attracted into the relative clause and this precedes the demonstrative antecedent. This is a very effective arrangement.

216. princeps . . . persolvit : paid first = was the first to pay. Remember that poena = penalty, which the culprit pays and the person wronged takes, and you will have no trouble in understanding the various idioms connected with poena. See Vocabulary.

217. eius : i.e. Caesaris.

218. socerī : L. Calpurnius Piso, consul of this year (see l. 110). The man killed was the great-grandfather of Caesar's fourth wife, so that Caesar's grievance would appear to be very far-fetched. But it is interesting to note the survival of the feeling of blood vengeance; cp. the feuds in our southern mountain districts.

220. CHAPTER 13. reliquās, etc. : for position see note on Caesarī, l. 111.

221. cōsequī : distinguish from sequī, persequī.

pontem . . . cūrat : he had a bridge built. See 166, 2 b.

223. commōtī : cp. with permōtī, l. 43.

cum : causal, with intellegerent as predicate.

id quod : explained by the clause ut . . . trānsirent. Translate by a phrase.

diēbus : ablative of time within which (97).

224. illum : contrast with ipsī, l. 223. Latin has at its command a large number of demonstratives representing the third person, while English has only he, she, it. In translating substitute names.

ūnō : but the Roman army numbered only about 42,000 men compared with approximately 240,000 of the enemy.

225. cuius lēgatiōnis : see note on l. 119.

226. Dīvicō: "devoted to the Lord."

bellō Cassiānō: see note on l. 123. The adjective (-ānus longing to) represents a clause: cuius bellī Cassius dux fuerat.

Sī pācem, etc.: the following lines are the first example of contingent indirect discourse and should be studied carefully in order to grasp principles of this frequent construction. The direct form of the sentence was as follows: Sī pācem populus Rōmānus cum Helvētiīs faciam eam partem ibunt atque ibi erunt Helvētiī, ubi eōs Caesar cōstituit atque esse voluerit; sīn bellō nōs persequī perseverābīs, reminiscere veteris incommodī populī Rōmānī et prīstinae virtūtis Helvētiā. Quod imprōvisō ūnum pāgum adortus es, cum iī quī flūmen trānsierat suis auxilium ferre nōn poterant, nōlī ob eam rem aut tuae magnae virtūtī tribuere aut nōs dēspicere. Nōs ita ā patribus maiōribus nostrīs didicimus, ut magis virtūte contendāmus quam dolō aut invidiamur. Quārē nōlī committere ut is locus ubi cōstitūerimur calamitāte populī Rōmānī et interneciōne exercitūs tui nōmen calet aut memoriam prōdat.

The clearest possible understanding of Latin indirect discourse is always reached by such a recasting of the report into its original form, especially as far as the proper reference of the pronouns is concerned.

populus Rōmānus, Helvētiīs, etc.: the use of the names instead of pronouns not only contributes to the clearness of the expression but also preserves the formal and legal character of the proposed contingent.

229. cōstituisset: from con- and statuō = to set up, place.

230. persequī: supply Helvētiōs.

231. reminiscerētur: for original imperative. This is an independent subjunctive.

incommodī: for case see 59. It is a mild word for defeat, in keeping with the peaceful character of the proposal. Later on, when Darius wishes to impress Caesar with the risk he is running (l. 239) he uses the strong words calamitāte, interneciōne.

232. Quod: as to the fact that. See 150, a.

233. cum: temporal, with original indicative.

234. nē . . . tribueret, dēspiceret: for a prohibition (154). Translate he should not, etc.

235. magnopere: here = multum, nimium.

236. ā patribus: properly an ablative of agent, because discō, I learn = doceor, I am taught.

ut . . . contenderent: object clause of result with didicisse, explaining ita.

237. dolō: ablative of means with nitor; to support one's self by = to rely on.

238. ut . . . caperet, prōderet (l. 240): object clause of purpose with committeret.

cōstitissent: for future perfect indicative. Divico refers to the place of the coming battle, not that of the present conference.

Page 52. 240. nōmen caperet: because many places have been named after some event happening there. Cp. Dead Man's Gulch.

241. CHAPTER 14. Hīs: supply rēbus.

Eō sibi, etc.: The original form of this speech was as follows: Eō mihi minus dubitātiōnis datur, quod eās rēs, quās vōs lēgātī Helvētīi commemorāvistis, memoriā teneō, atque eō gravius ferō, quō minus meritō populī Rōmānī accidērunt: quī sī alicuius iniūriae sibi cōnsciū fuisset, nōn fuit difficile cavēre; sed eō dēceptus est, quod neque commissum ā sē intellēxit quārē timēret, neque sine causā timendum putāvit. Quod sī veteris contumēliae oblīvīscī volō, num etiam recentium iniūriarum, quod mē invītō iter per prōvinciam per vim temptāvistis, quod Aeduōs, quod Ambarrōs, quod Allobrogēs vexāvistis, memoriā dēpōnere possum? Quod vestrā victōriā tam insolenter glōriāminī, Quodque tam diū vōs impūnē iniūriās intulisse admīrāminī, eōdem pertinent. Cōnsuēvērunt enim dī immortālēs, quō gravius hominēs ex commūtātiōne rērum doleant, quōs prō scelere eōrum ulcīscī volunt, Hīs secundiōrēs interdum rēs et diūturniōrem impūnitātem concēdere. Cum ea ita sint, tamen, sī obsidēs ā vōbīs mihi dabuntur, utī ea, Quae pollicēminī, factūrōs intellegam, et sī Aeduīs dē iniūriīs, quās ipsīs sociīsque eōrum intulistis, item sī Allobrogibus satisfaciētis, vōbīscum Pācem faciam.

Eō: ablative of degree of difference or of cause. See note on hōc, l. 30.

dubitātiōnis: genitive of the whole with minus. See note on reliquī, l. 194.

242. commemorāssent: carefully distinguish from reminīscī.

243. eō . . . quō: see note on l. 241.

244. meritō: does merit here fit the sense? What word does?

quī: i.e. populus Rōmānus.

245. iniūriae: genitive with an adjective (58).

sibi cōnsciū : knowing with one's self = conscious.

fuisset : condition contrary to fact, using the subjunctive also in direct discourse (140, a).

fuisse : its subject is cavēre. Translate it would have been.

246. eō : ablative of means.

dēceptum : supply esse populum Rōmānum.

quod : that. The clause explains eō.

commissum : supply esse. The indirect question quārē timēret is the subject. Literally, (it) why it should fear had not been done; freely, it did not see in the past any reason for fear.

247. timendum : supply esse. With putāret this is the second predicate of quod. Literally, it thought that to it fearing ought not to be; freely, it thought it ought not to be needlessly afraid.

248. Quod sī : but if.

contumēliae : see 59. This refers to the defeat of Cassius, l. 21; which victōriā, l. 252, also refers.

vellet : supply Caesar.

249. iniūriarum : objective genitive with memoriam.

quod . . . vexāssent : these clauses explain iniūriarum. For facts cp. Ch. 11.

250. per vim = vi.

251. posse : infinitive, because the question num, etc., is equivalent to a negative statement.

252. Quod : as to the fact that. These quod clauses are the subjects of pertinēre.

victōriā : ablative of cause. To whom do suā and sē refer?

tam insolenter : modifies glōriārentur, but tam diū modifies intulisse.

253. impūnē : force of im-? Compare with English, and with in- in intulisse. How about iniūria?

254. Cōnsuēsse, etc. : translate in this order: cōnsuēsse deōs mortālēs secundiōrēs rēs et diūturniōrem impūnitātem hīs concēdere quōs . . . velint, quō . . . doleant. Cōnsuēsse = cōnsuēvisse; perfect of inceptive verbs (in -scō) commonly has present meaning. Concēdere (l. 257) is complementary infinitive to it.

255. ex : source, but with causal force; for, over.

commūtātiōne : force of com-?

quōs : its antecedent is hīs.

257. Cum . . . sint : concessive, as tamen shows (135).

258. utī . . . intellegat: purpose.

ea quae polliceantur factūrōs: simplify to keep their promise. Eōs must be supplied as subject of factūrōs.

259. Aedūis: indirect object of satisfaciant.

263. utī . . . cōnsuērint: result clause. For tense see note on ut . . . dēbuerint, l. 186.

rei: objective genitive with testem.

268. CHAPTER 15. quem . . . habēbat: Caesar's whole cavalry was recruited from among the Gauls and, later on, from the Germans also. For the force of coāctum habēbat see note on l. 156.

269. quī videant: relative clause of purpose. For number see note on ut . . . extērent, l. 28.

quās . . . faciant: indirect question, object of videant.

270. Quī: see note on quā dē causā, l. 11. It refers to equitātum.

novissimum agmen: see Vocabulary, agmen. Distinguish exercitus, agmen, aciēs.

Page 53. 271. aliēnō locō: belonging to another = inīquō; opposite of suō. For omission of preposition see note on l. 101.

272. et: and indeed.

dē nostris: for the use of a preposition instead of the genitive see 55, a.

273. proeliō: ablative of cause.

sublātī: from tollō.

quod . . . prōpulerant: gives the reason for sublātī. The indicative shows that this reason is an assumption of Caesar's; if it were that of the Helvetians, the subjunctive would have been used.

275. agmine proeliō: ablatives of means. With the rear guard they excited our men by means of a skirmish. Translate proeliō lacessere by challenge to a fight.

276. ā proeliō: for use of preposition see 79, a.

277. satis habēbat: satis is the predicate accusative of habēbat, which has the infinitive prohibēre for its direct object. Thought keeping away sufficient = was satisfied to keep away.

rapinis, etc.: ablatives of separation.

279. hostium: when a compound phrase is modified by a genitive or a prepositional phrase, the latter is commonly placed between the two parts of the compound phrase, similarly to the arrangement of Prepositions discussed in the note on l. 11.

280. primum: supply agmen.

quinis: the distributive numeral, because the distance was kept day.

281. milibus: ablative of comparison (84). The accusative of tent might have been used (84, 2).

interesset: subjunctive of result.

282. CHAPTER 16. Aeduōs frumentum: some verbs of ask especially rogō, flāgitō, are used with two accusatives (73, b); but 1 of these verbs express the "person asked" by a prepositional phrase.

283. essent: subjunctive of indirect discourse implied in flāgit pūblicē: not publicly.

flāgitāre: predicate of Caesar. An infinitive (historical) with subject nominative is sometimes used instead of the imperfect indicative (165).

frigora: not cold climate, which would be frīgus, but cold weather, cold season. The clause quod . . . posita est, therefore, was written by Caesar, but is a geographical comment of some reader.

284. sub septentriōnibus: under this constellation, viz., in the north.

285. posita: see note on divīsa, l. 1.

frumenta: crops, while threshed grain is denoted by the singular (l. 287).

286. nē pābuli quidem: the words emphasized by nē quidem regularly inclosed by them.

287. flūmine, nāvibus: ablatives of means, though we use expressions of place in translating; up the river (on account of the force of SUBvexerat) in boats.

288. minus: see note on minimē, l. 8.

iter . . . āverterant: had turned their route away from = had turned aside from; namely, to the west, to reach the valley of the Liger (Loire).

289. ā quibus: and from them.

Diem, etc.: supply Caesarem as object of dūcere. Diem is accusative of extent of time. Dūcere, dīcere are historical infinitives, while cōnferri, comportārī, adesse are infinitives of indirect discourse and dīcere, with frumentum understood.

291. diūtius: too long (106, 1).

frumentum: object of mētīrī, which is subject of oportēret.

292. eōrum: i.e. Aeduōrum.

294. Diviciācō, Liscō: ablatives, appositive to principibus.

quī: i.e. Liscus.

295. quem: supply magistrātum. Notice the difference in meaning; here official, above office.

vergobretum: "chief judge."

creātur: legal term for electing.

annuus: predicate nominative. Translate for a year.

296. in: over.

297. cum . . . possit: concessive clause.

298. possit: supply frūmentum.

tempore, hostibus: ablatives absolute of circumstance; at a time so critical, with the enemy so near.

299. sublevētur: subjunctive of the indirect discourse implied in accūsāt.

cum . . . suscēperit: causal cum clause referring to multō gravius.

magnā ex parte: largely.

301. quod sit: object of queritur, in the subjunctive of implied indirect discourse.

queritur: distinguish from quaerō.

Page 54. 302. CHAPTER 17. Tum dēmum: notice the skill with which Caesar, by his detailed and circumstantial description of the desperate situation, leads up to the sudden revelation of treachery among his own allies. The vividness is still more emphasized by the use of the present prōpōnit (l. 303) and the principal, instead of historical, sequence of tenses in the following report.

303. quod . . . tacuerat: object clause of prōpōnit. Quod itself is object of tacuerat.

Esse: indirect discourse after the idea of saying in prōpōnit. For position of esse see note on erant, l. 94.

304. plūrimum valeat: valeō = I am strong, have value, am worth. Compare plūrimum posse.

306. nē . . . cōferant: translate from collecting. For construction after verbs of hindering see 147.

307. quod: relative.

Praestāre: subject, perferre (l. 309). The words praestāre, ēreptiē (l. 311) are quoted by Liscus from the sēditiōsa ōrātiō of the rebels.

309. dubitāre: supply sē.

quin: see 149.

Helvētiōs: the emphatic position shows that, in the opinion of the rebels, the Helvetians were the last bulwark of Gallic freedom.

superāverint: perfect subjunctive for future perfect indicative.

310. ūnā: adverb.

Aeduis: see 66, b.

311. sint ēreptūrī: the periphrastic conjugation (122) bring more clearly the future time, which otherwise would be expressed by the present or imperfect subjunctive.

Ab īsdem: here the speech of Liscus himself is resumed.

quaeque = et ea quae: a relative clause in indirect discourse, not in indirect question.

312. ā sē: i.e. Liscō. But hōs refers to īsdem.

313. quīn etiam: nay, more.

necessāriam: critical.

coāctus: only upon compulsion. This participle contains the idea.

314. id: i.e. quod ēnūntiārit.

315. fēcerit: indirect question, object of intelligere.

potuerit: we might have had the pluperfect subjunctive after the perfect infinitive tacuisse, but the writer prefers to maintain the principal sequence of the chapter.

317. CHAPTER 18. Dumnorigem: see l. 150, et seq.

318. plūribus: ablative absolute with praesentibus, participle praesum. For force of comparative see 106, 1.

319. iactārī: bandied about.

concilium: distinguish from cōnsilium.

320. ex sōlō: in private. Supply eō.

322. esse: supply ea.

Ipsū: the man referred to.

323. magnā, etc.: study the word order to see how the Latin develops a composite idea.

325. portōria: customs duties, upon entry, transit, export; gālīa, other taxes. There was no national customs union in (Cp. the early history of duties in the United States.

326. pretiō: ablative of price (88).

redēpta habēre: see note on l. 156. In antiquity, taxes collected by the so-called "farming" system. An individual or a company paid to the state a lump sum in advance for the taxes of a province and then collected the taxes for his or its own benefit.

327. licente: bidding (at auction).

nēmō: notice the emphatic position.

328. largiendum: not necessarily bribes. Among the Gauls and Germans, the more lavish the gifts which he bestowed among his followers, the more highly a prince or great noble was esteemed by them.

A goodly treasure, therefore, was always a political asset.

330. sūmptū: ablative of means. Translate by at.

neque = et nōn.

331. domī: see 99.

largiter: irregularly formed adverb from largus = multum.

332. causā: always placed after its modifying genitive. It looks forward to something not yet accomplished.

mātre: Dumnorix as head of his household held power over all the female members of his family.

Biturīgibus: "kings of the world." For construction see note on per Sēquanōs, l. 95.

homīnī: dative with the compound collocāsse. Had placed with = had married her to.

333. illic: modifies nōbilissimō.

ex Helvētiis = Helvētiam: she was the daughter of Orgetorix. See l. 59.

Page 55. 334. sorōrem ex mātre: i.e. they had the same mother but not the same father.

335. nūptum: for construction see note on rogātum, l. 185. The word can be used only of women.

civitātēs: contrast case with that of in Biturīgibus (l. 332). There the stress was upon homīnī collocāsse, here it is upon the place to which the woman was sent. These were political marriages such as we see to-day among European royalty.

collocāsse = collocāvisse.

Favēre: supply eum as subject.

336. Helvētiis: see 64.

affinitātem: distinguish this relationship by marriage from propinqui and necessārii, blood relations.

ōdisse: for meaning of tense see Vocabulary.

337. suō nōmine: ablative of cause. Nōmen is a business term, the name of the debtor which appears on top of the ledger page, hence = account; for private reasons.

338. eius : i.e. Dumnorīgis.

339. Sī quid accidat : the subjunctive represents an original future indicative.

quid : this older form of the indefinite pronoun is always used after sī, nisi, nē, num.

340. in spem . . . venīre : came into hope = conceived hope. Not quite equivalent to spērāre.

341. imperio : ablative of time when. Translate by under.

342. quam habeat : present. The position marks the clause as equivalent to an adjective.

343. Reperiēbat : the imperfect (of repeated statement) shows that many of the chiefs said so.

quod : as to the fact that.

344. paucis ante diebus : the adverb ante has comparative force and is used with an ablative of degree of difference. It is generally placed between adjective and noun.

345. factum : supply esse with initium as subject.

346. auxilio : dative of service (69).

Caesari : dative of reference (69, a).

349. CHAPTER 19. certissimae res : explained by the appositive quod clauses which follow. These have the subjunctive instead of indicative because they are given as existing in Caesar's mind.

351. dandōs cūrāset : see note on l. 221.

352. iniussū : ablative of attendant circumstance (92). Together with suō and civitātis, it corresponds to the ablative absolute inscientibus ipsīs.

suō : i.e. Caesaris ; a possessive adjective is used instead of the genitive of the personal pronoun.

354. accūsārētur : notice the change of tense. The other acts were of the past, but the charge had just been made and was still pending.

355. quārē . . . iubēret : indirect question, appositive to satis causae.

animadverteret : distinguish animadvertere in from animadvertere with the accusative.

356. animadvertere : for voice see note on rescindī, l. 117.

rēbus : indirect object of repugnābat.

357. quod . . . cōgnōverat : the clause is appositive to nūm.

358. sē ; i.e. Caesarem.

359. cōgnōverat: for force of tense see note on cōnsuēsse, l. 254.

nē . . . offenderet: for nē with verbs of fearing see 146.

361. cōnārētur: subjunctive, because this was Caesar's intention (128).

362. cotidiānis: those employed every day, regular. Caesar, of course, spoke no Celtic, and Diviciacus only imperfect Latin at best.

C. Valerium Troucillum: a Gaul to whom Roman citizenship had been given. He had, therefore, a Roman praenōmen and nōmen gentile, but a Gallic cōgnōmen. For Roman names see 175. The phrase per, etc., modifies colloquitur, l. 365.

364. cui: dative of indirect object, because fidem habēbat = cōnfidēbat.

omnium rērum: objective genitive with fidem. Translate the whole phrase: in whom he placed the greatest trust in everything.

Page 56. 365. commonefacit: stronger than monet. It has the indirect question quae . . . sint for its object.

ipsō: i.e. Diviciācō.

366. sint dicta, dixerit: subjunctives of indirect question (151).

367. sē: i.e. Caesarem.

368. ut . . . iubeat: object clauses of purpose after petit, hortātur.

eius: possessive genitive with animī.

ipse: i.e. Caesar; see l. 355.

370. CHAPTER 20. Caesarem: object of both complexus and obsecrāre.

371. nē . . . statueret: purpose clause after obsecrāre, representing a wish.

gravius: too (106, 1).

372. Scīre, etc.: indirect discourse after obsecrāre, which contains the idea of saying.

illa: the charges of Liscus and Caesar.

eō: his knowledge, referring to scīre, which is neuter.

373. dolōris: with plūs (55).

ipse: i.e. Diviciācus. For the sake of clearness the names should, where necessary, be substituted for the pronouns.

338. eius : i.e. Dumnorīgis.

339. Sī quid accidat : the subjunctive represents an original future indicative.

quid : this older form of the indefinite pronoun is always used after sī, nisi, nē, num.

340. in spem . . . venīre : came into hope = conceived hope. Not quite equivalent to spērāre.

341. imperio : ablative of time when. Translate by under.

342. quam habeat : present. The position marks the clause as equivalent to an adjective.

343. Reperiēbat : the imperfect (of repeated statement) shows that many of the chiefs said so.

quod : as to the fact that.

344. paucis ante diebus : the adverb ante has comparative force and is used with an ablative of degree of difference. It is generally placed between adjective and noun.

345. factum : supply esse with initium as subject.

346. auxilio : dative of service (69).

Caesari : dative of reference (69, a).

349. CHAPTER 19. certissimae res : explained by the appositive quod clauses which follow. These have the subjunctive instead of indicative because they are given as existing in Caesar's mind.

351. dandōs cūrasset : see note on l. 221.

352. iniussū : ablative of attendant circumstance (92). Together with suō and civitātis, it corresponds to the ablative absolute inscientibus ipsīs.

suō : i.e. Caesaris : a possessive adjective is used instead of the genitive of the personal pronoun.

354. accūsārētur : notice the change of tense. The other acts were of the past, but the charge had just been made and was still pending.

355. quārē . . . iubēret : indirect question, appositive to satis causae.

356. animadvertere : for voice see note on rescindī, l. 117.

rēbus : indirect object of repugnābat.

357. quod . . . cōgnōverat : the clause is appositive to nūm.

358. sē ; i.e. Caesarem.

359. cōgnōverat: for force of tense see note on cōnsuēsse, l. 254.

nē . . . offenderet: for nē with verbs of fearing see 146.

361. cōnārētur: subjunctive, because this was Caesar's intention (128).

362. cotidiānis: those employed every day, regular. Caesar, of course, spoke no Celtic, and Diviciacus only imperfect Latin at best.

C. Valerium Troucillum: a Gaul to whom Roman citizenship had been given. He had, therefore, a Roman praenōmen and nōmen gentile, but a Gallic cōgnōmen. For Roman names see 175. The phrase per, etc., modifies colloquitur, l. 365.

364. cui: dative of indirect object, because fidem habēbat = cōnfidēbat.

omnium rērum: objective genitive with fidem. Translate the whole phrase: in whom he placed the greatest trust in everything.

Page 56. 365. commonefacit: stronger than monet. It has the indirect question quae . . . sint for its object.

ipsō: i.e. Dīviciācō.

366. sint dicta, dixerit: subjunctives of indirect question (151).

367. sē: i.e. Caesarem.

368. ut . . . iubeat: object clauses of purpose after petit, hortātur.

eius: possessive genitive with animī.

ipse: i.e. Caesar; see l. 355.

370. CHAPTER 20. Caesarem: object of both complexus and obsecrāre.

371. nē . . . statueret: purpose clause after obsecrāre, representing a wish.

gravius: too (106, 1).

372. Scīre, etc.: indirect discourse after obsecrāre, which contains the idea of saying.

illa: the charges of Liscus and Caesar.

nec quemquam = et nēminem: et and a negative always combine into nec or neque.

373. dolōris: with plūs (55).

ipse: i.e. Dīviciācus. For the sake of clearness the names should, where necessary, be substituted for the pronouns.

374. plūrimum: with posset.

domī: i.e. apud Aeduōs.

ille: i.e. Dumnorīx.

375. sē: i.e. Dīviciācus. But Dumnorīx is subject of crēvisset.

376. ad . . . grātiām: gerundive construction of purpose (169, 3).

377. suam: with both grātiām and perniciem, referring to the speaker.

ūterētur: subjunctive in a subordinate clause in indirect discourse.

Translate quibus, however, by yet these.

378. frāternō = frātris: objective genitive.

vulgī: subjective genitive. Gender of vulgus?

Quod sī: now, if.

379. ā Caesare: ablative of source, almost equivalent to an ablative of agent because accidisset = factum esset.

accidisset: representing original future perfect.

cum: circumstantial, while.

eum locum amicitiae: literally, such a place of friendship = such high place in his friendship.

381. factum: supply esse.

futūrum utī . . . āverterentur: this circumlocution is frequent in place of the future passive infinitive.

382. cum: is this preposition or conjunction? Look for the mood of the verb.

verbis: ablative of means, but translate as manner.

384. cōnsōlātus: equivalent to a circumstantial cum clause.

faciat: subjunctive in indirect discourse, representing an original imperative. It might have been connected with rogat by ut and would then have been called an object clause of purpose.

tantī: see 57, c.

eius: i.e. Dīviciāci.

sē: i.e. Caesarem.

385. utī . . . condōnet: result clause. Literally, that he presents as a gift to his prayers the wrong; freely, that he would overlook the wrong on account of . . .

rei pūblīcae: objective genitive.

387. reprehendat, intellegat, querātur: indirect questions, objects of ostendit, prōpōnit, l. 388.

389. ut . . . vitet: object clause of purpose with monet.

390. praeterita: participle used as noun, past. For construction see note on l. 385.

391. Dumnorigi: dative of reference.

custōdēs pōnit: Caesar was not foolish enough to rely on Dumnorix's repentance. In the end, he put him to death for treason (V, 7).

agat, loquātur: indirect questions, objects of scīre.

392. possit: purpose.

393. CHAPTER 21. Caesar resumes the narrative broken off in Ch. 16. Recall the situation.

394. sub: be careful about translating this word.

in circuitū: by a roundabout route. Caesar planned to attack the Helvetians from the rear and front at the same time.

396. quī cōgnōscerent: relative clause of purpose. Its (omitted) antecedent is the object of mīsit.

Renūtiātum est: with facilem (ascēsum) esse as subject.

397. Dē tertiā vigiliā: at what hour?

prō praetōre: praetor was the old title of the commanding general. A lēgātus prō praetōre was a deputy, with the rank of commander in case of the absence of the actual general.

398. iis: with cum, while ducibus is appositive to it.

cōgnōverant: here actual pluperfect of cōgnōscō; had learned, had reconsidered.

399. cōsiliū: predicate possessive genitive (52, a).

400. dē quārtā vigiliā: how much later? As the Roman army marched about three miles an hour, the circuitus (l. 395) was about nine miles longer than the straight road.

402. rei militāris: genitive with an adjective (58).

403. habēbātur: see note on dūxērunt, l. 49.

L. Sullae: in the Mithradatic War, 88-84 B.C.

M. Crassī: in the Slave War, 73-71 B.C. Considius was thus an officer of very large experience and seemed the most reliable person to Caesar, who so far had had little experience as general on a large scale.

405. CHAPTER 22. cum . . . tenērētur: the subjunctive proves this clause to be circumstantial. How far does it extend?

summus mōns: see summum iugum montis, l. 399. For meaning see 105.

407. passibus: ablative of comparison (84).

neque . . . aut . . . aut: and . . . neither . . . nor. See note on nec quemquam, l. 372.

408. comperit: perfect.

409. equō admissō: ablative absolute denoting manner; the horse being urged = at full gallop.

accurrit, dicit: historical presents. And so subducit, instruit in ll. 412, 413. Notice the lack of connectives (asyndeton) which strengthens the impression of hurry produced by the present tenses.

412. collem: the Romans, wherever possible, chose for a battlefield the slope of a hill. The position on higher ground increased the weight of the attack and facilitated the defense.

subducit: sub = close to.

aciem: for arrangement of a Roman battle line see Introduction, 41.

413. ut . . . praeceptum: the intransitive verb praecipere cannot form a personal passive (64, a).

nē . . . committeret: dependent on praeceptum erat, and representing a prohibition.

414. ipsius: i.e. Caesaris.

415. visae essent: indirect discourse, representing original future perfect indicative.

ut . . . fieret: explains the purpose of this plan.

416. monte occupātō: translate as if montem occupāverat et.

exspectābat, abstinēbat: notice the tense of continued action. Use the progressive form in English.

417. Multō . . . diē: ablative absolute denoting time; when the day was much = late in the day.

419. timōre perterritum: thoroughly (per) frightened by fear = panic-stricken.

quod nōn vīdisset: relative clause, object of renūntiāvisse.

420. vīsō = eō quod vīdisset.

421. intervāllō: antecedent of quō. Attracted into the relative clause it is equivalent to eō intervāllō (ablative of measure) quō cōnsuēverat sequī.

mīlia: see note on l. 394.

423. CHAPTER 23. Postrīdiē: though an adverb, this word retains enough of its original force (ablative of time) to be used with a genitive.

424. cum . . . oportēret: really when, but with subjunctive because it gives this as a thought of Caesar's. Translate until, etc.

mētīrī: see note on l. 291.

425. Bibracte: "Beavertown," to-day Beuvray. Note the ablative in -e, though an i-stem. For use of preposition see 78, a.

rei frumentariae: dative of indirect object with prōspiciendum (sibi esse).

428. Bibracte: see 75, 1.

429. decuriōnis: the cavalry was divided into decuriae, corresponding to the centuriae of the infantry. The legion originally had a cavalry complement of ten per cent.

Gallōrum: see note on l. 267.

430. Helvētīi, etc.: this somewhat complicated sentence should be carefully studied as to its order of clauses. In translating, it should be broken up into a number of smaller, independent clauses, somewhat like this: Helvētīi Rōmānōs . . . existimābant; eō magis . . . commīsissent; (aut) eō . . . cōnfīdebant; commūtāvērunt cōnsilium atque iter convertērunt. (Sic) . . . coepērunt.

timōre: see note on l. 419.

431. existimārent, cōnfīderent (l. 434): subjunctive, because the reason is not a fact, but a guess of Caesar's.

eō: ablative of degree of difference or of cause.

432. superiōribus, etc.: ablative absolute, concessive.

commīsissent: subjunctive, because this is assumed to be the belief of the Helvetians; so-called implied indirect discourse.

433. rē frumentariā: ablative of separation.

interclūdī posse: supply Rōmānōs.

434. conversō: turned around completely. Notice the force of con-.

435. ā novissimō agmine: ablative of point of view (80); in the rear.

438. CHAPTER 24. mediō: half way up the hill. See 105.

439. triplicem: see Introduction, 41.

Veterānārum: this was Caesar's regular habit. The untried recruits were kept from panic by being employed in sappers' work. The four legions were VII-X, the others XI, XII.

442. complēret: result.

impedimenta sarcināsque: the baggage train and the burdens of the individual soldiers. See Introduction, 27, 28.

443. ab iis: the two legions.

444. cōstitērant: from cōsistō.

446. aciē: ablative of manner.

448. successērunt: notice carefully the meaning of the compounds of cēdere, which originally meant go.

449. CHAPTER 25. suō . . . omnium: see note on iniussū, l. 352. Supply equō with suō.

omnium: the staff officers.

450. equis: he wanted to show his soldiers that he and his officers were willing to share the common fate. This was Caesar's first pitched battle, and the confidence of his troops would largely depend on his behavior.

ut . . . tolleret: purpose.

451. cohortātus: the address of encouragement was regularly given before commencing battle.

ē locō: with missis. The elevation increased the effect of the throw.

453. gladiis: ablative of means.

454. Gallis: dative of reference, regularly with a dative of service (impedimentō). See 69, a.

ad pugnam: purpose.

455. quod . . . poterant (l. 458): substantive clause of cause, subject of erat impedimentō. The phrase poterant pugnāre finds its explanation in the circumstantial cum clause, cum . . . inflexisset, which in its turn is explained by the ablatives absolute.

plūribus = complūribus: the iron part of the pīlum was very long. See Introduction, 26.

456. inflexisset: only the point of the pīlum was steel, the shank being soft iron.

458. multī ut = ut multī: result clause, praeoptārent.

iactātō: wrenched, ablative absolute, circumstantial.

459. manū: ablative of separation.

nūdō: unprotected. Either ablative of manner, or ablative absolute denoting manner.

460. pedem referre: distinguish the expressions of defeat: pedem referre = put back foot after foot, yield slowly, with face to the enemy; sē recipere = retreat in formation; terga vertere = turn one's back, flee; fugae sē mandāre = run wild, be in a disorderly rout.

mōns: a hill to the west.

461. spatiō: ablative of measure.

462. Captō, etc.: ablatives absolute denoting circumstance. Notice the distinction of tense: captō, the Helvetians had reached the hill; succēdentibus, the Romans were following up.

464. milibus: ablative of means.

465. novissimis praesidiō: see note on l. 454.

466. ex itinere: that is, without forming in battle line.

ab latere apertō: the unprotected right side.

467. circumvenire: with coepērunt, l. 470.

471. conversa signa . . . intulērunt: briefly for signa convertērunt et signa intulērunt. These are the military terms for face about, charge.

bipertitō: ablative of manner. They formed two fronts by making the rear line face about toward the Boii.

473. ut . . . resisteret: purpose.

victis ac submōtis: participles used as nouns, in dative of indirect object. They emphasize the bravery of the Helvetians who, even after defeat, attacked again.

474. venientēs: i.e. Bōiōs.

475. CHAPTER 26. proeliō: ablative absolute.

476. pugnātum est: an impersonal passive is used in Latin to express the doer of an action by an indefinite subject, like one, you, people, they. Translate by the active voice with such a subject.

478. alterī . . . alterī: for translation see 113. The words here refer to the two parts of the Helvetian army.

481. proeliō: ablative of time during which, where we would use an expression of extent. See below, l. 493.

482. cum . . . sit: concessive.

ab hōrā: both night and day were divided into twelve hours, from sunset to sunrise and from dawn to sunset. Thus the hours would vary in length according to the season. For convenience's sake, however, we reckon from 6 to 6. The seventh hour began at noon. Late in June, therefore, in the latitude of northern France, the battle lasted till about 9 P.M.

483. āversum: turned away, i.e. the back of an enemy.

484. multam noctem: see note on multō diē, l. 417.

487. ē locō: from the top of the carts.

488. venientēs: circumstantial, while coming up.

Coniciēbant: contrast this form and the following imperfects with obiēcēbant.

489. raedās: a Gallic word, "traveler." And so matarās, "thrower," a kind of tomahawk; trāgulās, "rope spear," a javelin with a thong for recovery fastened to it. The phrase inter . . . raedāsque belongs to nōnnūllī.

captus est: agreeing with the nearer of the two subjects (114, 2).

493. CXXX: 368,000 people started (Ch. 29) and about 66,000 had perished in the battle of the Arar (Ch. 12). This would make the number lost about 175,000. It is likely, however, that many thousands, especially of the noncombatants, had succumbed to the hardships of the last two months.

494. partem: accusative of extent. Evidently it refers only to the first night.

495. Lingonum: "fast horsemen." The name survives in Langres.

quārtō: that is, on the third day, since the Romans counted both the starting point and the day of arrival.

496. propter, etc.: the two prepositional phrases modify morātī.

498. litterās nūntiōsque: hendiadys, messengers with written instructions.

nē . . . iuvārent: an original prohibition (nē iūverītis), quoted from the letters.

499. nēve: a negative purpose clause is regularly continued with nēve instead of et nē.

iūvissent: subjunctive of indirect discourse for original future perfect indicative.

500. locō: the phrase is taken from the use of the abacus, on which the Romans did their calculating. It is still used by Chinamen and as a child's toy. Consider them of the same line = treat them like.

Helvētiōs: supply habēret.

intermissō: compare the meaning here with that of the same word in l. 495.

503. CHAPTER 27. Quī cum = et cum hī: in translating this sentence it is best to turn all parts of the compound cum clause (to iussisset) into independent sentences. Otherwise the sentence will appear top-heavy, the main clause being the one verb pāruērunt.

505. eōs: i.e. Helvētiōs.

quō = in quō.

506. pāruērunt: distinguish carefully from parāre.

507. pervēnit: for tense see 126.

508. perfūgissent: subjunctive, because quoted as part of Caesar's demand.

ea: neuter, because referring to nouns of different genders.

conquīruntur: for tense see 127, a.

509. circiter: with mīlia sex.

510. perterriti: so-called "construction according to sense," since mīlia hominum = hominēs.

nē . . . afficerentur: clause depending on timōre perterriti which is equivalent to timentēs (146).

511. suppliciō, etc.: supplicium means capital punishment, and hence with afficiō the meaning is put to death.

513. existimārent: subjunctive, because the reason is given as a guess of the author (130).

primā nocte: see 105.

516. CHAPTER 28. Quod ubi = id autem ubi.

quōrum: the antecedent, hīs (l. 517), should be translated before quōrum.

517. utī . . . redūcerent: object clause after imperāvit.

sibi: i.e. Caesarī; dative of reference.

518. vellent: subjunctive for original future indicative.

in . . . habuit = in . . . locō: see note on l. 500. It is a veiled allusion (euphemism) to the fact that he massacred them.

quō: ablative of means.

523. tolerārent; relative clauses with negative antecedents take the subjunctive (125, a).

cōpiam facerent: make a supply = furnish.

524. ipsōs: i.e. Helvētiōs, contrasted with Allobrogibus.

quōs: agrees with the nearer antecedent.

restituere: contrast this construction with the ut clause after imperāvit.

526. nē . . . essent (l. 529): a purpose clause, but probably caused by the idea of fear, understood.

529. Galliae: see 70.

Bōiōs: direct object of concessit. This verb also has the clause ut . . . collocārent (purpose) as object, and petentibus Aeduīs as indirect object. Translate, however, as if Bōiōs were the object of collocārent.

530. erant cōgnitī: indicative, because it is Caesar's reason. The subject is Bōiī, understood.

533. atque: expressions of identity and equality are regularly connected by atque. Translate as.

534. CHAPTER 29. tabulae: the Romans wrote on wooden tablets covered with a thin layer of wax into which the letters were scratched with a metal pencil (stīlus).

535. Graecis: the Greek alphabet, which they had taken over from Massilia.

relātae: supply sunt.

536. ratio: account.

537. exisset . . . possent: subjunctive, because this was part of the contents of the tablets.

538. capitum: cp. the use of souls in our language.

Page 62. 542. fuērunt: agreeing with mīlia, not with the subject summa.

544. C et X: 130,000 survived the battle (Ch. 26), so that besides the 6000 people of the Verbigenus canton, another 14,000 must have perished before they had finally settled again. The calm with which Caesar speaks of the terrible havoc among this brave people shows the innate cruelty of the man which, in spite of many contrary instances, broke out again and again during the Gallic War.

CHAPTERS 30-54. — THE CAMPAIGN AGAINST ARIOVISTUS

The danger to the Province from the Helvetian emigration was now past. But another and greater danger was looming up. Fifty years before Caesar's governorship two German tribes, the Cimbers and the Teutons, had suddenly emerged from the dense forests across the Rhine. In a few years they had traversed Gaul and part of Spain, had annihilated several Roman armies in Gaul, and were threatening Italy. Only the skill, energy, and daring of the great general Marius, Caesar's uncle by marriage, had destroyed, first the Cimbers at Aquae Sextiae in the Province, and then the Teutons at Vercellae in Italy. But the fear of a repetition of this bold attack was ever present in the Roman mind. A few years before Caesar's arrival in Gaul, a German leader, Ariovistus, had, by invitation of a Gallic tribe, crossed the Rhine to aid one of the ever-warring Gallic factions. Instead of returning to his native country, he had settled in Gaul, had forcibly taken one third of the Arvernian soil, and was now preparing to settle another horde of his Germans on the second third. All this had happened in free Gaul, beyond the limits of Caesar's province. But wise statesmen could not close their eyes to the danger of Germans seizing a country uncomfortably near the Roman province. Caesar's victory over the Helvetians had enhanced his prestige among the Gauls. Their chiefs turned to the Roman commander for aid against the German raider. And Caesar, though Ariovistus was officially, through Caesar's own assistance, on terms of alliance with Rome, welcomed the opportunity to strike a blow, not only for reasons of foreign policy, but also in order to establish himself in the eyes of the Roman populace as the true and legitimate successor of his great uncle.

545. CHAPTER 30. Galliae: in the narrower sense of l. 3.

546. grātulātum: see 170, a.

547. Intellegere: indirect discourse, depending on the idea of saying in grātulātum.

prō: in return for.

Helvētiōrum, populī: subjective and objective genitive, respectively, with iniūriis.

548. poenās . . . repetisset: see note on l. 216 and Vocabulary.

549. ex ūsū: ablative of accordance, to the advantage.

550. accidisse: depends on intellegere, l. 547.

cōnsiliō: ablative of cause, explained by the appositive ut clause of purpose, utī (l. 552) . . . habērent (l. 555).

551. flōrentissimis rēbus: ablative absolute of circumstance with concessive force; in spite of, etc.

553. domiciliō: dative of service.

cōpiā: supply locōrum.

ex omni Galliā: equivalent to a genitive of the whole.

554. iūdicāssent: distinguish from the use of the same tense in reliquissent. Iūdicāssent represents an original future perfect indicative, reliquissent an original perfect indicative.

555. stipendiāriās: predicate accusative.

556. utī . . . liceret: purpose clause, object of petiērunt. For translation see note on l. 122. Liceret is modified by sibi.

558. habēre: indirect discourse, because petiērunt implies speaking.

cōnsensū: ablative of accordance, but translate after obtaining.

559. conciliō: see note on domiciliō, l. 553.

560. nē quis ēnūntiāret: object of sānxērunt, representing an original prohibition. Literally, made holy by oath that nobody should; freely, bound each other by oath not to make known (their meeting).

561. mandātum esset: see note on ut . . . praeceptum, l. 413.

562. CHAPTER 31. idem = eīdem.

563. ante: adverb. Supply apud Caesarem.

utī . . . licēret: see note on l. 556.

565. Caesari: see 66, a. Translate by a genitive.

566. Nōn minus, etc.: indirect discourse, depending upon the idea of saying contained in the suppliant attitude.

id: cognate accusative with contendere and labōrāre (72). Insert for.

567. nē . . . ēnūntiārentur, utī . . . impetrārent: purpose clauses, appositive to id.

ea quae dīxissent: literally, that which they should have said (original future perfect); freely, their words.

ea quae vellent: literally, that which they wanted; freely, their request.

568. ēnūntiātum esset: for original future perfect. Supply sē dīxisse as subject.

Page 63. 570. Galliae: in the narrow sense. The case is possessive; translate in.

571. hārum: partitive genitive with alterius, which is objective genitive with prīncipātum, the object of tenēre.

573. contenderent: the Romans used tenses of continuing action (present, imperfect) to denote that something begun in the past still continues. Translate by pluperfect, and cum by after.

factum esse utī . . . arcesserentur: a roundabout expression for arcessitōs esse. The ut clause is one of result. Factum is from fiō.

574. mercēde: ablative of means; translate by for.

575. Hōrum: i.e. Germānōrum.

577. trāductōs: supply esse.

578. mīlium: genitive of measure (57, a).

579. clientēs: free states, but under the suzerainty of the larger state.

semel atque iterum: not twice, but like our once and again, ~~repeatedly~~.

580. pulsōs: participle, explaining calamitātem; by a defeat. With Aeduōs, etc., it forms the subject of accēpisse and āmīsisse.

582. proeliis: ablative of means with frāctōs, which is a participle showing the reason for coāctōs esse, l. 584.

frāctōs: modifying eōs understood, subject of coāctōs esse and antecedent of quī.

583. virtūte: ablative of means with potuissent, or of specification.

hospitiō: this was an official relation, corresponding to our treaties of amity. Translate hospitiō and amīcitiā together: by close relations of friendship.

584. ante: adverb.

obsidēs: appositive to nōbilissimōs. Translate by as.

586. sēsē . . . essent (l. 588): indirect discourse depending upon iūre iūrاندō . . . obstringere = promise.

587. recūsātūrōs quōminus . . . essent: after verbs of refusing, object clauses introduced by quōminus or nē are used. Translate by an infinitive: to be.

588. illōrum: i.e. Sēquanōrum.

589. Ūnum: with esse, of which sē is subject. Notice the emphatic position.

590. potuerit: irregular primary sequence instead of the pluperfect, caused by the present idea in these words.

ut . . . daret: purpose clause after addūcī, in secondary sequence after the perfect subjunctive potuerit.

591. Rōmam: see 75, 1.

592. postulātum: see 170, a.

sōlus: adjective used as a noun and referring to the subject of enerētur.

593. peius: adjective used as noun, a worse fate.

victōribus: noun used as an adjective.

598. mēnsibus: ablative of degree of difference with the (comparative) adverb ante.

600. locus ac sēdēs: hendiadys, room for homesteads.

Futūrum esse, etc.: for this circumlocution see note on l. 381.

601. annis: ablative of time within which.

Page 64. 602. cōferendum, comparandam (l. 604): was to be = would be.

603. Gallicum: supply agrum. To bring out the proper meaning in English invert the sentence, and translate as if it were Ger- mānōrum agrum cum Gallicō, and Germānōrum cōsuētūdinem cum hāc.

604. victūs: observe carefully the -ī, and distinguish from victus (vincō).

605. ut semel = ut primum.

vicerit: notice the irregular sequence which is maintained to the end of the chapter.

606. quod proelium: for position see note on lēgātiōnis, l. 119.

Admagetobrigae: "Admagetos' Castle," of unknown location.

superbē et crūdēliter imperāre: gave haughty and cruel orders. It is often advisable to turn a Latin verb into a whole phrase and translate its modifiers accordingly.

607. obsidēs: appositive with liberōs.

nōbilissimī cuiusque: see 112, 6.

608. exempla . . . ēdere: put forth examples and torments = practiced all kinds of torments.

609. qua: from quis or quī, indefinite. Notice quantity, and distinguish from quā.

ad: in correspondence with, according to.

610. Hominem: contemptuous, the fellow.

611. quid: with auxiliū, l. 612. Translate freely, unless some aid might be had from.

612. Gallis: see 67.

idem: explained by ut . . . emigrent, etc.

616. sint: for original erunt.

dubitāre: supply sē, i.e. Dīviciācum, as subject.

617. supplicium sūmat: supplicium sūmere dē, take punishment from = inflict punishment upon. Compare poenās repetere.

618. Caesarem: subject of posse (ll. 620, 621).

auctōritāte, etc.: ablatives of means.

620. nē . . . trādūcātur: negative purpose clause after a verb of hindering.

Rhēnum: for case see 73, a, 2.

621. ab . . . iniūriā: see note on l. 190.

625. CHAPTER 32. Animadvertit: the position of the verb makes it emphatic.

ūnōs: adjective used as a noun and appositive to Sēquanōs — alone.

626. tristēs: translate as if an adverb.

628. respondere: what shows that this is not an infinitive of indirect discourse? See note on flagitare, l. 283.

629. saepius: repeatedly.

630. neque ullam = et nullam.

631. Hoc: ablative of degree of difference or of cause, explained by the quod clause, l. 633.

633. soli: used as noun and appositive to the subject of auderent and horerent.

nē . . . quidem: see note on l. 286.

634. absentis: emphatic and with concessive force; though absent.

636. tamen: at least.

Sequens: dative of agent with perferendī, l. 639.

quī . . . essent (l. 638): these relative clauses have causal force (133). Translate since they, since their.

638. essent perferendī: with propterea quod, l. 635.

640. CHAPTER 33. verbis: (connected) words, a speech.

641. sibi, cūrae: datives of reference and service, respectively. Translate the phrase: he would look after this matter.

642. beneficiō suō: the title rēx atque amīcus populī Rōmānī had been given to Ariovistus during Caesar's consulship.

643. factūrum: future indicative in indirect discourse after spem habere = spērāre (157, 1).

645. hortābantur: here followed by an indirect question (quārē putāret) instead of the usual purpose clause. Translate quārē, etc., to think.

646. in primis: supply rēbus. This is an adverbial phrase; translate chiefly.

frātrēs, etc.: another of those honorable titles bestowed by the Senate on foreign tribes as an outward mark of an alliance. For case see 76.

647. numerō: ablative of specification; omit in translation.

appellātōs: modifies Aeduōs.

648. vidēbat: notice the peculiar order which emphasizes vidēbat. Translate he saw with his own eyes.

649. eōrumque: i.e. Aeduōrum.

650. quod: relative. Its antecedent is contained in the infinitives enērī and esse.

in tantō imperiō = cum imperium tantum esset: translate in view of the greatness of the empire.

turpissimum: adjective used as noun, a great disgrace. For degree see 106, 2.

652. Germānōs cōnsuēscere . . . multitudinem venīre (l. 653): infinitives, subjects of periculōsum (esse), the object of vidēbat. Periculōsum is singular because the two infinitives form one idea. Translate for the Germans, etc.

654. sibi: dative, indirect object of temperātūrōs, referring to hominēs. Translate would refrain, etc.

655. quīn: sibi temperāre = abstinēre, a verb of hindering. Negative verbs of hindering are followed by quīn (147).

cum . . . occupāvissent: a temporal clause originally indicative.

656. Cimbri, etc.: this occurred 107–101 B.C.

fēcissent: the subjunctive is due to indirect discourse. Translate as . . . had done. In translating the sentence Paulātim . . . contenderent (ll. 651–657), simplify by using the English verbal noun in -ing (gerund): he thought that after seizing, as . . . had done, they would not refrain from emigrating, etc.

658. praesertim: always stamps the cum as causal.

Rhodanus: emphatic position; only the Rhone.

659. quibus rēbus: indirect object with occurrendum. The dative of agent (sibi) is omitted because Caesar wishes to make the thought indefinite. Translate and against these events protective measures must be taken.

mātūrrimē: notice the irregular form.

660. sibi . . . sūmpserat: had taken for himself = acquired.

661. ut . . . vidērētur: result clause. Any so or such expression before an ut clause points to a result.

ferendus nōn: unbearable.

662. CHAPTER 34. placuit: impersonal, with dative. The clause ut . . . mitteret is the subject. Translate as if cōstituit.

663. quī . . . postulārent: relative clause of purpose with mitteret. The clause utī . . . dēligeret in its turn is object of postulārent.

medium utriusque: between them.

Page 66. 664. Velle, etc.: indirect discourse, depending upon the idea of saying in postulārent and giving the reason for the demand.

rē publicā: not state but a public matter = matters of state.

665. summīs . . . rēbus: the greatest affairs of both = topics of the greatest importance to both.

666. Sī . . . fuisset: condition contrary to fact in indirect discourse (157, 2). The original form was sī . . . mihi . . . esset, ego . . . vēnisset.

Opus esset: an impersonal phrase, there was need. The person feeling the need is put in the dative, the thing needed is either the subject of the phrase or put in the ablative (87). Translate freely, if he wanted anything of Caesar.

667. sī quid ille sē velit: sē is direct object, quid is cognate accusative with velit (72). The irregular present subjunctive is used to distinguish this condition (originally vult) from the contrary to fact condition esset. Translate if he should want anything from him.

670. exercitum: object of contrahere.

672. mirum vidēri: infinitive in indirect discourse with the question quid . . . esset as subject.

suā: emphatic position, his own part of.

673. Caesari: possessive dative with esset (68).

negōtīi: partitive genitive with quid.

675. CHAPTER 35. respōnsis: participle used as noun, ablative absolute with relātis.

676. mandātis: notice the change of relations indicated by this word. Caesar was now sending an ultimatum.

Quoniam . . . esse (l. 681): indirect discourse depending upon the idea of saying in mandātis. Study carefully the structure of this sentence before translating. Its skeleton is: quoniam . . . referret, ut . . . pretāret, haec esse.

677. suō populique Rōmānī: see note on suō, l. 352.

affectus: after being treated, referring to Ariovistus.

Cum . . . appellātus esset: gives the reason for beneficiō. Translate by having been called.

678. suō: i.e. Caesaris. See Introduction to Ch. 30, et seq., p. 138.

Hanc . . . grātiām: explained by the appositive clauses ut . . . putāret (result). Distinguish grātiām referre = to bring back thanks, show gratitude; grātiām habēre = to have thanks, feel grateful; grātiās agere = to plead thanks, express gratitude (by words).

680. invitātus: after being asked. The infinitive venire depends on gravārētur.

commūni rē: matters of common interest.

681. sibi: dative of agent. In translating, make sibi the subject of an active expression.

haec esse: the clause quae . . . postulāret is subject of this infinitive. The haec is explained by primum . . . inferret (ll. 682-687).

quae . . . postulāret: simplify by turning into a noun.

682. nē . . . trādūceret, redderet, permitteret, nēve . . . lacesseret, nēve . . . inferret (l. 687): prohibitions and commands reported in indirect discourse.

683. amplius: in the future.

685. voluntāte . . . liceret: see note on l. 122.

686. illis: i.e. Aeduīs.

nēve: continuing the nē of l. 682. See note on l. 499.

iniuriā: ablative of means, translate wrongly.

687. fēcisset: for the future perfect.

sibi, eō (l. 689): i.e. Caesarī, Ariovistō. Freely, there would be . . . between him on the one hand and Ariovistus on the other hand.

689. impetrāret: this represents the future indicative; supply Caesar as subject.

sē: subject of neglectūrum, l. 694.

M. Messālā: 61 B.C.

690. cēnsuisset: the regular word for a vote of the Senate.

691. quicumque . . . obtinēret: simplify, any governor of . . . Obtinēret represents a future indicative.

quod: so far as.

commodō: ablative, with due regard for. What is the case of reipublicae?

693. dēfenderet: with utī (l. 690), representing imperative. Translate by should.

sē: repeats the sē from l. 689, on account of the length of the sentence.

695. CHAPTER 36. Iūs esse: infinitive predicate of the clause ut . . . imperārent; use it as grammatical subject.

696. quī vicissent, quōs vicissent: simplify, the conquerors, the conquered.

quem ad modum: according to which manner, i.e. as (relative).

Page 67. 697. ad: according to.

698. alterius: used here instead of alius.

699. cōnsuēsse: for force of tense see note on l. 254.

praescriberet: for present indicative.

700. quem ad modum: here interrogative (how), introducing an indirect question, object of praescriberet.

701. sibi: i.e. Ariovistō. Translate by a possessive.

702. armis: ablative of means, translate by in.

703. Magnam: emphatic position; great was the wrong which, etc.

704. suō, sibi: i.e. Caesaris, Ariovistō. The Latin dative of reference is often equivalent to the English possessive. The relative clause is causal.

705. nōn: emphatic position, certainly not.

706. neque: nor, on the other hand.

iniuriā: see note on l. 686.

707. manērent: for future indicative. Literally, if they should remain in that which had been agreed upon (convēnit, impersonal verb = it is agreed, cp. conventional); freely, if they should keep the agreement.

stipendiumque: the -que here adds an explanation to quod convēnisset.

Translate by namely.

708. nōn fēcissent: for future perfect indicative. The nōn belongs to the verb alone, which makes the meaning omit.

his: dative of reference.

frāternum: adjective used instead of a genitive. The whole phrase means literally, the brotherly name of the Roman people will be far away in reference to them; that is, the name "brothers of the Roman nation" would not help them at all.

709. Quod: as to the fact that.

sibi, sē (l. 710): i.e. Ariovistō, Caesarem.

711. sēcum: i.e. cum Ariovistō, suā referring to nēmīnem.

Cum: general time, whenever. The original form of the verb was future indicative.

712. cōgredērētur: for imperative.

intellēctūrum: supply Caesarem as subject. The infinitive has the indirect question quid . . . possent for its object.

713. exercitātissimī: force of superlative?

715. CHAPTER 37. Haec: with mandāta, but in emphatic position.

For the force of mandāta see note on l. 676.

716. et: the coördinating conjunction is meant to bring home forcefully the coincidence in time with the preceding clause. Translate as.

Trēveris: in the valley of the Moselle, around the modern Trèves.

Aedui: supply veniēbant.

717. questum: supine of purpose with veniēbant (170, a).

717. nūper: see l. 598.

718. essent, populārentur: subjunctives of the indirect discourse implied in questum.

719. Ariovistī: possessive genitive with pācem, but translate by from.

720. Trēverī autem: supply questum veniēbant. Notice the two constructions possible with words of feeling; (a) a quod clause (l. 717); (b) indirect discourse (l. 720).

rīpās: the easterly (right) bank. The plural, because several places on the bank are meant.

721. cōnārentur: progressive.

723. sibi: dative of agent with mātūrandum (esse).

nē . . . posset: this purpose clause is influenced by the idea of fear suggested by vehementer commōtus. What was the reason for this feeling? See Introduction to this campaign, p. 138.

724. sī . . . coniūnxisset: for future perfect indicative.

725. resistī: supply iīs. The passive infinitive is impersonal. Translate lest resistance would be impossible.

rē frūmentāriā: Caesar always gave the greatest consideration to the question of his supplies, because his greatest weakness would lie in their lack when he was in the country of the enemy and supported by allies who were unreliable.

726. quam . . . potuit: see 106, 2.

727. Ariovistum: Caesar was in the territory of the Lingones (Ch. 27) while the German king seems to have been at the confluence (Coblentz) of the Moselle and the Rhine, expecting the Suebian reinforcements. The direction of the Roman march, therefore, was almost due north.

730. Vesontiōnem: "Bisontown," to-day Besançon, an important French fortress. Notice the gender.

quod: a pronoun subject followed by a predicate noun is made to agree with this noun rather than with its antecedent.

731. Id: the taking of Vesontio. The nē clause is subject of prae-cavendum.

733. ūsui: dative of service, translate useful.

735. idemque: supply oppidum.

nātūrā locī: for the following description compare the sketch.

736. dūcendum: for meaning cp. l. 291.

737. facultātem: distinguish its meaning from that of facultās, l. 735.

738. Dūbis: "Black River," to-day Doubs.

ut: as if.

740. spatium: carefully read the sentence to determine the case of this word.

741. pedum: genitive of measure. For the use of cases after amplius see 84, 2.

742. intermittit: literally, the river leaves off; freely, where the river affords no protection.

743. rādicēs: object of contingant, of which rīpae is subject.

744. Hunc: object of efficit, which has arcem as predicate accusative (73, c).

746. nocturnis diurnisque: adjectives instead of the adverbial expressions by night and by day.

748. CHAPTER 39. Dum . . . morātur: for tense and meaning see 127, a.

749. ex: source, but translate in consequence of.

750. quī . . . praedicābant: upon this the words ingentī . . . esse depend, while saepe . . . potuisse depend upon dīcēbant (l. 754).

751. magnitūdine: ablative of description, predicate with esse.

752. saepe, etc.: before attempting to translate the parenthesis, be sure to master the rest of the sentence.

753. congressōs: here of a peaceful meeting.

vultum: facial expression.

aciem: fierceness.

755. nōn mediocriter: not a little = very much. An example of littes, the stating of a thing by denying its opposite.

756. Hic: supply timor.

757. tribūnīs . . . reliquīsque: young Romans of good families used to accompany the general in the field, partly to acquire some knowledge of warfare, partly also for the sake of gaining money through lawful and unlawful methods, or simply for the sake of traveling. Caesar veils the truth of the situation by amīcitiae causā, for the appointments were largely due to political influence.

758. nōn magnum = minimum.

alius aliā: see 113.

quam . . . dīceret: literally, which he said to be necessary for himself for departing; freely, which, as he said, made it imperative for him to depart.

761. ut . . . licēret: see note on l. 122.

762. ut . . . vitārent: is this result or purpose?

763. vultum fingere: mold their face = control their features.

765. tenēre = retinēre.

770. tōtis castris: with tōtus, ūnus, cūctus the preposition is commonly omitted (98, 2).

771. obsignābantur: the seal was necessary to make the instrument valid in law. They made their wills, and thereby showed they were sure they would be slaughtered.

772. vōcibus ac timōre: hendiadys, expressions of fear.

776. quique . . . praeerant: the praefecti equitum, experienced soldiers, not to be confused with the praefecti of l. 757.

778. Quī . . . ex hīs = (It) ex hīs (instead of partitive genitive) quī. It (understood) is subject of dīcēbant, l. 783.

779. nōn: with verērī.

780. angustiās, magnitūdinem: with timēre, l. 783.

782. rem frūmentāriam: by anticipation it has become the object of timēre. Translate as if subject of posset.

ut: with timēre (146).

784. castra movērī ac signa ferri: the two steps in continuing a march; strike tents and pack up, pull up the standards and carry them. Compare Introduction, 49.

fore: futūros esse.

dictō: dative with audientēs = oboedientēs, obedient.

785. neque: and . . . not.

786. CHAPTER 40. cōnsiliō: meaning in this passage?

787. omniumque ōrdinum: for the ranking of the centurions see Introduction, 30. The council of war regularly consisted of the imperātor, the lēgātī and tribūnī, and occasionally the centuriōnēs prīmōrum ōrdinum, i.e. the centurions of the first cohort of each legion. The extraordinary step here shows how serious Caesar judged the situation to be.

788. quod . . . putārent: the subjunctive is due to the idea of saying in incūsāvit.

Page 70. 789. sibi . . . cōgitandum: supply esse. This is the object of putārent, having for its subject the indirect question quam . . . dūcerentur.

790. cōnsule: see Introduction to this campaign, p. 138.

791. cūr . . . iūdicāret: a question reported in indirect discourse is put in the subjunctive. Here the direct form also used the subjunctive.

792. temerē: with discessūrum.

officiō: allegiance.

Sibi . . . persuādērī: for construction see 64, a. Distinguish persuādeō = persuade, make plausible, with ut clause, from persuādeō = convince, with accusative and infinitive.

793. cōgnitīs . . . perspectā: ablatives absolute, equivalent to temporal clauses.

796. intulisset: for the future perfect.

verērentur: see note on l. 791.

797. suā, ipsius: i.e. mīlitum, Caesaris.

798. periculum: formed from (ex)perior. The word originally meant trial.

Patrum . . . memoriā: see Introduction to this campaign, p. 138; also note on l. 656.

799. cum . . . vidēbātur: the subjunctive should have been used. But the indicative emphasizes the fact and thus stimulates the soldiers to do as well.

Cimbris . . . pulsīs: ablative absolute.

801. meritus: supply esse.

vidēbātur: here used as actual passive of videō.

Factum: supply esse periculum.

nūper: 73-71 B.C. The ablative tumultū is one of time. The slaves in this rising were largely recruited from among the Germans captured by Marius.

802. quōs: servilī is equivalent to servōrum, hence the plural form of the pronoun.

aliquid: to a certain extent.

803. quam: agreeing with the second antecedent alone.

iūdicārī: impersonal passive (115). The indirect question quantū, etc., is its subject.

804. habēret: the tense follows the regular sequence, but the meaning is general. Use present tense in translating.

sē: refers to cōstantia.

bonī: genitive of the whole with quantum.

805. quōs: refers to hōs (l. 806), which should be translated first.

805. inermēs: appositive to quōs, just as armātōs ac victōrēs is appositive to hōs.

807. quibuscum: the relative pronoun is to be repeated, in the accusative, before nōn, with et supplied.

809. superārint, potuerint: irregular sequence.

quī: i.e. Helvētiī.

810. exercituī: dative with an adjective (70).

proelium: of Admagetobriga, l. 606.

811. quaererent: for the future.

reperire: has for its object Ariovistum . . . vīcisse, ll. 812–816.

812. diūturnitāte: ablative of cause with dēfatīgātīs, which with Gallīs forms an ablative absolute.

813. cum . . . fēcisset: simplify by translating after keeping, etc.

castrīs, etc.: ablative of means, within, etc.

ac: explanatory; namely.

neque: without.

814. suī: objective genitive with potestātem; a chance at him.

dēspērāntēs: with Gallōs, understood, object of adortum. Translate while despairing.

815. adortum: translate by an independent verb.

rationē et cōnsiliō: trickery and stratagems.

816. rationī: anticipated from hāc (rationē), l. 817. Translate for what trickery.

817. ipsum: i.e. Ariovistum.

818. Quī: supply eōs. Literally, those who placed their fear into the difficulty of the grain supply and into the narrowness of the road; freely, those who laid the blame for their fear upon a pretended lack of grain supplies and upon the narrowness of the road.

820. facere: acted.

cum . . . vidērentur: see note on l. 14. Translate in seeming.

821. dē . . . praescribere: to despair of the general's doing his duty or to dare to dictate his duty to him.

823. iamque: and furthermore, by now.

824. frūmenta: see Vocabulary.

825. Quod: as to the fact that.

826. dīcantur: translate it was said that they.

nihil: not . . . at all.

scire: supply sē.

827. quibuscumque: translate by a possessive, whose army.

828. aut: before this word supply hīs as dative with dēfuisse and convictam (reference). Translate: those, whose army had been mutinous, had either been deserted by good luck for managing poorly or had been found guilty of avarice by having some misdeed found out.

829. suam: i.e. Caesaris.

innocentiam: uprightness. Notice that the conclusion gives the facts in the opposite order from the premise; innocentiam corresponds to avāritiam, fēlicitātem to fortūnam.

831. quod . . . fuisset: object of repraesentātūrum; what he had intended to postpone.

834. utrum . . . an: for this form of question see 151, 1. It is the object of intellegere.

pudor atque officium: (sense of) shame and duty.

835. praetereā nēmō: nobody else.

sequatur: for future indicative. Irregular sequence.

836. sōlā: alone.

nōn dubitet: absolute; had no doubts.

837. praetōriam cohortem: the body of troops encamped next to the tent of the general (praetōrium), hence his bodyguard.

840. CHAPTER 41. mīrum in modum = mīrum ad modum: cp. quem ad modum.

conversae: note the force of con-, completely.

842. illāta est: supply mīlitibus. The singular is used because the two nouns alacritās and cupiditās form one idea.

princepsque = prīmaque. For translation, see note on l. 216.

843. grātiās ēgit: see note on l. 678.

844. fēcisset: subjunctive, because it is a quotation.

846. prīmōrum: i.e. of the first cohorts. See note on l. 787.

847. utī . . . satisfacerent: purpose, instead of the original imperative.

Sē, etc.: indirect discourse, depending upon the idea of saying in satisfacerent. Neque umquam = et numquam.

848. dubitāsse: see note on l. 836.

summā bellī: conduct of the war.

suum: predicate adjective with esse, having iūdicium for its subject.

And so imperātōris, predicate possessive genitive: the judgment was not theirs, but the general's.

850. itinere: only now when Caesar was certain of the loyalty of his army does he seem to have taken measures to ascertain a more comfortable route. Compare this statement with his bold assertion in l. 823.

851. ei: because fidem habēbat = cōnfidēbat.

ut . . . dūceret: purpose.

mīlium: genitive of measure.

852. quīnquāgintā: for omission of quam see 84, 2.

locis: ablative of way by which, without preposition.

854. cum . . . intermitteret: causal cum clause, to explain how he came so near the enemy in so short a time. Bring this out by inserting already before septimō.

Page 72. 858. CHAPTER 42. Quod . . . existimāret: indirect discourse, because lēgātōs . . . mittit implies speaking.

Quod: is this pronoun or conjunction? How do you decide? In translating, turn the clause into a noun phrase: as to his former request for . . .

per sē: as far as he (Ariovistus) was concerned.

862. cum . . . pollicērētur: causal clause.

petentī: equivalent to a clause.

863. in spem veniēbat: was coming into hope = was commencing to hope.

865. fore utī: this circumlocution makes up for the missing future participle of dēsistere.

866. quīntus: what other gender might have been used? Why?

saepe cum: for cum saepe. Latin likes to group words of similar meaning or etymology together; so here the two expressions of time.

ultrō: here of place. See Vocabulary.

867. nē . . . addūceret: representing original prohibition. For use of quem see 112, 2.

869. uterque: notice the number. The English must use the plural.

870. venīret: for original imperative.

aliā ratiōne: ablative of manner, on other terms.

871. interpositā causā: ablative of means, by a reason put in between = by some flimsy pretext.

872. Gallōrum: he had learned their unreliability in the Helvetian War. See l. 270 and l. 343.

873. commodissimum esse: object of statuit. The infinitive has for its subject the infinitive impōnere, l. 875. Insert it.

874. equīs: ablative absolute with dētractīs. But equitibus is dative of reference with the same participle.

eō = in eōs: thereon.

legiōnāriōs: regular. The legion contained other troops besides the infantry.

876. sī . . . esset: for the future.

quid opus factō: see note on l. 666. Quid is accusative of respect. Literally, if there was need of a deed in any way; freely, if there should be need for (any) action.

877. nōn irrīdiculē: an example of litotes. See 171, 3.

878. ex militibus: for use of preposition see 55, a.

879. pollicitum: supply eum esse.

880. ad equum: the joke is untranslatable. Ad equum rescribere is (1) to enroll among the horse, (2) to enroll (during the census) among the men entitled to serve on horseback, the knights. Bear in mind that the equites were the moneyed class in Rome.

882. CHAPTER 43. erat: there was.

tumulus terrēnus: an earth mound, without rocks.

883. castris: here with plural meaning.

Page 73. 885. dēvexerat: down into the plain.

passibus: ablative of means, as is intervāllō, l. 887.

887. ex equis: because the voice comes from the direction of the beasts; on horseback. See note on ex vinculis, l. 69.

888. ut . . . addūcerent: object of postulāvit.

dēnōs: see 24.

889. initiō: ablative of means; translate by in.

891. quod . . . missa; these three clauses are appositive to beneficia.

892. amplissimē; on a lavish scale. Notice the adverb.

quam rem, etc.: referring to the quod clauses. The words quam . . . cōnsuēsse form the object of docēbat, l. 893.

893. prō: in payment for.

cōnsuēsse tribuī: was accustomed to be given = was usually given.

894. illum: subject of cōsecūtum, l. 896.

Cum: concessive.

aditum: i.e. to the senate. Compare our phrase have the entrée.

iūstam: with both aditum and causam.

895. suā: i.e. Caesaris.

896. Docēbat: the indirect questions quam . . . tenuissent (l. 900) are the object of this verb.

896. quam: how.

897. ipsis cum: between them and. The whole passage reads, literally, how old and how just reasons for relationship came between for them with the Aeduans. Translate freely, how old and how strong were the reasons for friendship between the Romans and the Aeduans.

898. quae, quotiēns, quamque: it is impossible in English to embody more than one interrogative in a sentence. Translate: what decrees had been passed, how often this had been done, how honorable they were.

senātūs cōnsulta: legal term for resolutions of the Senate.

899. ut: interrogative.

902. ut . . . vellet (l. 903): result clause, explanatory of hanc cōnsuetudinem.

sui: genitive of suum, used as a noun; their possessions.

903. grātiā, etc.: ablatives of specification.

auctiōrēs: participle used as an adjective, therefore comparable.

904. quod: relative or conjunction? Why?

905. id . . . ēripī: object of patī.

iis: dative of reference with ēripī.

posset: for mood see note on l. 791.

Postulāvit . . . eadem: he made the same demands.

906. Nē, etc.: cp. l. 682, et seq.

908. posset: for present indicative.

910. CHAPTER 44. ad: with reference to.

pauca, multa (l. 911): cognate accusatives (72). Translate by adverbs. The omission of a connective between the two sentences brings out the contrast all the more sharply. Insert but or while.

912. et: strengthening, nay.

913. magnā . . . praemiis: hendiadys; translate hope of rewards.

914. sēdēs, obsidēs (l. 915): objects of (sē) habēre, made emphatic by position.

916. quod: refers to stīpendium; such as.

cōnsuērint: notice the irregular sequence here and in the following lines.

Page 74. 918. ad . . . oppugnandum: purpose.

920. pulsās ac superātās: hendiadys; translate thoroughly routed.

921. parātum: adjective.

922. inīquum esse: recūsāre is the subject. Insert it.

dē stīpendiō: translate as if direct object of recūsāre.

suā: i.e. Gallōrum.

923. pependerint: from pendō.

924. sibi ōrnāmentō: datives of reference and service, respectively

925. petisse: supply eam.

926. remittātur, subtrahantur: for the future.

927. recūsātūrum; renounce, give up. Compare the construction here with that in l. 922.

928. Quod: as to the fact that.

929. sui mūniendī . . . causā: see 168, 1. Sui, genitive of reflexive pronoun, for the original object (sē) of mūniendī; so Galliae oppugnandae for Galliam oppugnandī (169, 2).

930. testimōnium esse: the clause quod . . . dēfenderit is the subject of the infinitive.

931. bellum: object of both intulerit and dēfenderit; had waged a war not offensive, but defensive.

932. prius: adverb. The statement is true only if limited to the immediate past, for the Romans had warred on the Allobroges as early as 121 B.C.

935. Quid sibi vellet: indirect discourse for quid tibi vīs. Mihi volō means I wish for myself, I claim, I intend. Notice the secondary (regular) sequence from here on.

suās: i.e. Ariovistī.

936. hanc: the part of Gaul where the armies now are.

937. illam: i.e. the Province.

Ut: as.

ipsi concēdī: see 64, a. A nobīs, as expression of agency, is to be supplied.

938. faceret: for original present indicative.

939. Quod: as to the fact that.

941. rērum: see 58.

ut . . . sciret: result clause. Translate as not to know.

942. bellō: ablative of time; 62 B.C.

943. ipsōs: i.e. Aeduōs.

his: these latter.

944. sēcum: i.e. cum Ariovistō.

945. Dēbere: he ought to, i.e. he must, he had reason to.

simulātā . . . amicitīā: ablative absolute. Translate by independent clause: C. was pretending friendship, but. Notice the emphasis laid on simulātā.

946. quem exercitum: attracted antecedent, equivalent to exercitum quem.

sui opprimendī: see note on l. 929.

947. Quī nisi = itaque nisi ille.

dēcēdat, etc.: for future indicative.

948. prō amicō, prō hoste: compare in hostium locō habēre, l. 518.

949. Quod sī: now, if, with perfect subjunctive representing future perfect.

nōbilibus, etc.: the office-holding or conservative party in Rome. They were afraid of Caesar as leader of the democracy. Undoubtedly there was a grain of truth in the assertion of Ariovistus, but the details are not known.

951. compertum habēre: see note on l. 156. Compertum habēre = scīre.

952. quōrum: refers to nōbilibus.

953. Quod sī: but if. Dēcēssisset represents the future perfect for which the perfect subjunctive had been used in l. 949. Notice how little attention Caesar pays to the so-called "sequence."

liberam: predicate adjective with trādīdisset; undisturbed.

954. magnō: by being separated from its noun (praemiō) the word becomes emphatic.

956. eius: subjective genitive with labōre and perīculō; on Caesar's part.

957. CHAPTER 45. in eam sententiam: to this purpose, in this tenor.

958. quārē . . . posset: indirect question, explanatory of sententiam.

959. ut . . . dēsereret: object of patī.

961. Ariovistī, etc.: predicate possessive genitive.

Bellō, etc.: the proofs for the statement Galliam, etc.; 121 B.C.

962. quibus: antecedent Arvernōs; indirect object of ignōvisset. The relative clause is in contrast to the infinitive statement. Translate but these.

963. neque . . . neque: supply eōs, eīs.

964. sī . . . oportēret: for oportet.

antīquissimum quodque tempus: literally, each oldest time; freely, the question of priority.

966. iūstissimum: thoroughly justified, not just.

iūdicium: sentiment.

967. quam . . . voluisset: causal relative clause (133), since they had wanted it (Gaul).

968. victam: equivalent to a concessive clause.

suīs: i.e. Galliae.

969. CHAPTER 46. geruntur: why present?

970. tumulum: see 70, a.

973. nē . . . rēicerent: object of imperāvit. Quod is the adjective form of the indefinite, quid the substantive form.

974. legiōnis: either objective genitive with periculō, or subjective genitive with proelium. The latter is preferable.

975. proelium fore: object of vidēbat.

committendum . . . ut . . . posset: the ut clause is the subject of committendum (esse). Literally, he thought that it must not be brought about that it could be said; freely, he thought he ought not to allow it to be said.

976. pulsis hostibus: temporal ablative absolute.

per fidem: through (and beyond) the pledge = through treachery.

977. vulgus: note gender and declension.

978. ēlātum est: the indirect questions quā . . . dirēmisset (l. 981) are the subject.

quā arrogantia: with ūsus, employing what arrogance = with what arrogance.

979. Galliā: ablative of separation with interdixisset, of which Rōmānis is the indirect object.

980. ut: interrogative.

aeque rēs: supply ut.

Page 76. 983. CHAPTER 47. Biduō: ablative of degree of difference with the adverb post. The statement conflicts with prīdiē, l. 988, but a further engagement may have occurred in the meantime.

984. Velle, etc.: indirect discourse after the idea of speaking in lēgātōs mīsīt.

coeptae, etc.: when a passive infinitive is joined to coepisse, this verb is itself made passive. Neque = but not.

985. utī . . . cōstitueret . . . mitteret: subjunctive clause for original imperative.

986. minus: see note on minimē, l. 8.

vellet: original present indicative.

987. causa: supply esse.

988. eō magis: all the more.

989. quīn : negative verbs of hindering are followed by a quīn clause. Translate from throwing.

990. Lēgātum : object of missūrum, obiectūrum.

magnō, etc. : emphatic ; insert only.

991. Commodissimum : esse understood, with mittere (l. 998) as subject. The infinitive has Valerium and Mētium (l. 998) for its objects.

992. Procillum, Cabūrī : for the names see note on l. 362. Notice that the Roman part of the name is borrowed from the man (governor of Gaul in 83 B.C.) who had bestowed the citizenship. This was the regular custom.

995. quā multā : multā is predicate adjective to quā (linguā). Translate by an adverb.

996. cōnsuētūdine : ablative of cause.

997. in eō : in his case.

esset : subjunctive, because this is Caesar's belief.

998. hospitiō, etc. : enjoyed the hospitality of = was on terms of hospitality with. For this official, not personal, relation see note on l. 583.

999. quae diceret : indirect question, object of cōgnōscerent and referrent. These ut clauses, in turn, are the object of mandāvit.

1002. Quid : in regard to what = why.

venirent : question reported in indirect discourse (155).

an : the second part of a double question is often used by itself, usually to express indignation ; (was it for some other purpose) or for. The underlying idea is surely only for.

1003. Cōnantēs : object of prohibuit, and equivalent to a temporal clause.

1004. CHAPTER 48. mīlibus : ablative of measure.

1006. trādūxit : Caesar has often been blamed for not stopping this maneuver which was intended to, and did for a time, cut his line of communication. But Caesar had not yet tried out his soldiers after their panic and could not risk a decisive engagement. Then, too, the configuration of the territory does not seem to have been favorable for a flank attack, which was rare in ancient warfare. Study the map.

1008. supportārētur : subjunctive by attraction (160).

1011. habuit : see note on l. 156.

ut . . . deesset : purpose clause. The negative nōn instead of nē is used because nōn deesset forms one idea = adesset.

vellet; originally present indicative, but the subjunctive is used because the condition forms an integral part of Caesar's purpose (160). Caesar keenly felt the difficulty of his position, but found his match, it seems, in the cunning and generalship of Ariovistus.

Page 77. 1013. diēbus: ablative of time within which.

castris: see note on l. 813.

equestri: for the lack of a connective and the necessary translation see note on l. 910.

1014. hoc: the following. It is the subject, while genus is predicate noun.

1016. numerō: ablative of specification.

1017. cōpiā: supply, number.

singulī: supply equitēs; they had chosen, each his own companion.

1018. his: refers to peditēs (l. 1016), and so do eōs (l. 1018) and (l. 1019).

versābantur: imperfect of habitual action (117, 1); insert used to.

1019. sī quid erat dūrius: if anything was too hard = if there was ous trouble.

quī: i.e. eques. Notice the adjective form of the indefinite pronoun.

1020. graviōre: see 106, 1.

1021. sī . . . prōdeundum: if there was need of advancing.

quō: indefinite adverb of place.

1022. hōrum: i.e. peditum.

1023. equōrum: with both iubīs and cursum, a case of double dependence. See note on l. 66.

1024. CHAPTER 49. eum: i.e. Ariovistum, subject of tenēre.

nē . . . prohibērētur: purpose clause with dēlēgit (l. 1027) and vēnit (1028).

1025. quō in locō: see note on l. 94.

1027. castris: dative with an adjective (70). This was a bold stroke, the execution of which Caesar took a grave risk, but the success of which turned the tables on his opponent.

1031. Eō: adverb; namely, to the site of the new camp.

expedita: agreeing in form with mīlia, in sense with hominum.

They left their baggage behind, to be ready for fighting. Translate in fight order.

1033. mūnitiōne: the work of fortifying, not the fortification.

Nihilō: ablative of degree of difference.

1038. CHAPTER 50. institūtō: ablative of accordance (93).

utrisque: this word, regularly singular, must be plural here, because castra has no singular.

1039. paulum: in its original force as accusative of extent.

Page 78. 1045. pugnātum est: see note on l. 476.

1046. multis . . . vulneribus: literally, many wounds having been inflicted and received as well; freely, with great loss on both sides.

1049. quod . . . esset: explains hanc . . . causam.

ut . . . dēclārārent: result clause, explaining ea cōnsuētūdō.

1050. sortibus, etc.: lots were often employed to forecast the future. The Germans are said to have used marked twigs, scattered on a white cloth. The vāticinātiōnēs were prophecies uttered by persons believed to be inspired.

1051. utrum . . . necne: double indirect question, object of dēclārārent. Notice that double indirect questions must be introduced by utrum (151, 1).

ex ūsū: see note on l. 549. Proelium committī is the subject.

necne: the second part of a double question may be abridged (or not). Direct questions use annōn, indirect necne (151, 1).

eās ita dīcere: indirect discourse, the answer of the captives. The eās refers to mātrēs, l. 1050.

1052. Nōn esse: indirect discourse after dīcere.

esse fās: has Germānōs superāre for its subject.

1053. contendissent: for the future perfect. Thus a superstition decided the fate of a great war.

1055. CHAPTER 51. quod . . . est: object of reliquit.

ālārīōs: derived from āla, wing, probably so called because in the regular Roman battle line they were placed at the wings.

1056. prō: in front of.

prō: in proportion to.

1064. Eō: i.e. in raedās.

1065. proficiscentēs: with mīlitēs.

1066. passis: from pandō.

sē: the women.

1068. CHAPTER 52. singulis . . . singulōs: one over each.

1069. quaestōrem: he had only one quaestor. See Introduction, 36.

testēs: predicate accusative.

suae quisque: a reflexive and quisque occurring in the same clause are regularly placed next to each other.

1070. ā dextrō cornū: ablative of point of view (80).

eam partem: that is, the left wing of the Germans. Compare l. 1079.

1072. Ita: with ācritēr. Similarly in l. 1073 itaque = et ita, with repente and celeriter.

signō datō: this was a trumpet blast.

Page 79. 1074. pīla . . . coniciendī: pīla is object of coniciendī. What other construction would have been more usual?

Rēiectis: thrown behind, not back. Turn into a coördinate clause.

1076. impetūs: plural, since the sword charge consisted of a series of duels.

1077. Repertī sunt: emphatic position, to contrast with the threatening attitude of the Germans. Insert yet.

complūrēs nostrī: literally, ours in numbers = a number of our men.

1078. insilirent, revellerent, vulnerārent: so-called characteristic subjunctives. A relative clause after certain antecedents has the subjunctive (125). They jumped on the shield roof which protected the square from above.

1079. Cum: concessive.

ā sinistrō cornū: see note on l. 1070. This time the words refer to the Germans.

1082. adulēscēns: to distinguish him from his father, the Triumvir.

1083. quod . . . erat: gives the reason for animadvertisset. The cavalry was not employed during the battle. The quick decision of the young man saved the day for the Romans.

1084. tertiam: this had been kept in reserve.

1086. CHAPTER 53. atque: and finally.

omnēs: emphatic; not only the left wing but the whole army.

1087. terga vertērunt: see note on l. 460.

prius: join with quam.

1088. quīnque: the distance is doubtful. From the battlefield to the Rhine it would be about 15 miles. Perhaps Caesar mistook the Ill, a tributary of the Rhine, for the great river.

1089. viribus: ablative. Cōnfīdō takes the ablative of the thing and the dative of the person.

1094. ūna: one would expect altera, to correspond with altera in l. 1095.

1095. Nōrica: cp. l. 92.

dūxerat: supply in mātirimōnium. Contrast with the meaning of dūxerat in l. 1094.

1098. cum . . . traherētur: circumstantial; while being dragged.

trīnis: nouns which have no singular regularly take distributives instead of cardinals.

1099. equitātū: see 85.

1100. Quae . . . rēs: a humane trait, showing one of Caesar's most lovable qualities, his warm regard for personal friends. The feeling, here, was doubtlessly enhanced by political considerations. He could ill afford to have it said that he had sacrificed the life of a noble Gaul when he had been unwilling to risk one of the Roman officers (l. 990).

1102. hominem . . . restitūtum: object of vidēbat, l. 1104.

honestissimum: not honest.

familiārem: emphasizes the personal relation, as hospitem emphasizes the official relation.

1104. neque . . . quicquam = et nihil.

1106. cōsultum: supply esse; impersonal passive.

utrum . . . an: double indirect question, subject of cōsultum.

1110. CHAPTER 54. quī . . . vēnerant: cp. l. 720.

1112. quī: supply īī as antecedent.

Rhēnum: see 70, a.

mātūrius: about September 25.

1115. hīberna: supply castra.

1117. conventūs: the governor was not only military commander, but also chief justice. He traveled circuit for this purpose.

BOOK II

CHAPTERS 1-35. — THE WAR AGAINST THE BELGIANS

Page 81. LINE 1. CHAPTER 1. Cum esset: see 129, a.

suprā: see Bk. I, l. 1117.

2. dēmōnstrāvimus: the editorial "we." Caesar never uses the first person singular in speaking of himself, but either the third singular, when he appears as commander, or the first plural, when he speaks as the author.

crēbrī: not many, but repeated.

afferēbantur: imperfect, to show repeated action.

3. litterisque: ablative of means (85) with certior fiēbat. Notice that litterae means a letter and also letters.

Labiēnī: the most trusted and most capable of his lēgātī or assistants, who had been left in command of the troops while in winter quarters in Transalpine Gaul.

certior fiēbat: the subject is Caesar, with which certior agrees.

omnēs, etc.: construction of indirect discourse (153) after the idea of telling in certior fiēbat.

Belgās: between the Seine and the North Sea. See Bk. I, l. 5.

4. quam: the real antecedent is Belgās; but when a pronoun subject is followed by a noun predicate, it agrees with the gender and number of this noun.

dixerāmus: see Bk. I, l. 1.

5. coniūrāre: the Belgians were a free nation and could not properly be said to conspire. But this is the Roman point of view, that Rome is the destined mistress of the world.

inter sē dare: inter with the reflexive pronoun is regularly used to express the idea of one another. Give to one another = exchange.

6. Coniūrandī: gerund (169, a) in objective genitive (54) construction, dependent on causās. Objective and subjective genitives may be tested by changing the governing noun into an active verb of which the genitive will become either subject or object.

hās: predicate of esse; causās is the subject.

6. verērentur: subjunctive, because dependent clauses in indirect discourse are always in this mood (156).

7. nē . . . addūcerētur: verbs of fearing are used with a subjunctive clause, introduced by nē affirmative and ut negative (146).

omnī . . . Galliā: ablative absolute expressing circumstance. An ablative absolute should be translated by either a clause or a phrase, rarely by the English nominative absolute.

pācātā: a mild expression, veiling the fact of conquest.

Galliā: the central part of Transalpine Gaul, between the Rhone and the Seine. See Bk. I, l. 4.

eōs: the Belgians; sē would have been ambiguous.

noster: i.e. Rōmānus.

8. nōnnūllis: not none = some (litotes, 171, 3).

9. partim quī . . . partim quī (l. 11): the antecedent of these relatives (ab iīs, to be supplied) is appositive to Gallīs.

ut . . . nōluerant: ut with the indicative means (1) as, (2) when, (3) because. This verb and those following are in the indicative because they are an explanation added by Caesar and not part of the letters.

Germānōs: subject of versārī, which is complementary (object) infinitive with nōluerant. The Germans, under Ariovistus, had gained control of a large part of free Gaul before Caesar's appearance. They had just been driven out by the Romans. See Bk. I, Ch. 30-53.

10. atque: introducing a stronger fact; and even.

11. molestē ferēbant: see Vocabulary under ferō.

12. mōbilitāte: ablative of cause (83) with studēbant, of which novīs imperiīs is the indirect object (64). Were eager for new governments = desired a change of government.

ab nōnnūllis: supply sollicitārentur.

13. ā potentiōribus: ablative of agent with occupābantur, l. 15.

atque iīs: supply ab.

14. condūcendōs: hire. Not a purpose construction, but the gerundive instead of an original gerund with a direct object (168).

15. rēgna: plural because each man wanted his own little rule.

occupābantur: seize, not occupy. Avoid the translation of a Latin word by its English derivative, which generally has a different meaning.

quī: referring to potentiōribus; and these.

rem: namely, royal power. Always adapt the translation of rēs to the context.

imperiō nostrō : ablative of attendant circumstance (92). Translate by under.

17. CHAPTER 2. commōtus : notice the force of com-, completely, deeply.

duās : he had already six (numbered VII–XII) ; these were XIII and XIV.

18. initā aestāte : ablative absolute expressing time when. Literally, summer having been entered upon = early in the summer.

19. in . . . Galliam : connect with quī dēdūceret, a relative clause of purpose (123, 4) with Pedium as antecedent.

20. cum primum : ordinarily used with the indicative. Here the circumstances that made Caesar wait are emphasized.

cōpia : subject of esse, the complementary infinitive with inciperet.

21. Dat negōtium = imperat : it is historical present (116, a), after which either a primary or a secondary sequence (122, Exc. a) may be employed.

Senonibus : “fighters.” This tribe lived between the upper Loire and the Seine. The name survives in that of the city of Sens.

22. reliquisque : see 105.

Belgīs : dative with an adjective (70).

utī . . . faciant : purpose clause in apposition with negōtium.

23. gerantur : subjunctive, because the clause forms an integral part of the ut clause (160).

sēque : i.e. Caesarem.

24. certiōrem faciant : see note on certior flēbat, l. 3.

cōstanter omnēs : not redundant. Cōstanter means that there were no contradictions in the reports, omnēs that all the tribes reported.

25. manūs, exercitum : each district raised its small contingent and these were concentrated into one army.

26. dubitandum : supply esse.

quīn : after a negative verb of doubting, a subjunctive clause introduced by quīn is used. It was not a question of hurry but one of doubt as to whether Caesar should take the illegal step of waging war outside of his province. When he had done this the preceding year, he could claim the attack of the Helvetians and the appeal of the Aeduians in his defense. No such reason existed in this case.

diēbusque : ablative of time within which (97).

29. CHAPTER 3. Eō: adverb. The clause cum . . . vēnisset is circumstantial.

dē imprōvisō: prepositional phrase expressing manner.

opīniōne: ablative of comparison (84). Translate than was expected.

30. Rēmī: the "leaders," around modern Rheims.

Galliae; dative with an adjective (70).

ex Belgis: reckoning from, etc., instead of a genitive of the whole with proximī.

31. lēgātōs: appositive to Iccium et Andebrogium ("Greatland"); and so also prīmōs.

32. quī dicerent: relative clause of purpose. From here to the end of the chapter we have the first long example of indirect discourse in this book. The student will best understand this peculiar Roman expression if he tries to recast the report into its direct form. So here: nōs nostraque omnia in fidem atque potestatem populī Rōmānī permittimus, neque cum reliquīs Belgīs cōsēnsimus neque contrā populum Rōmānum coniūrāvimus, parātīque sumus et obsidēs dare et imperāta facere et oppidīs recipere et frūmentō cēterisque rēbus iuvāre; reliquī omnēs Belgae in armīs sunt, Germānīque, quī cis Rhēnum incolunt, sēsē cum hīs coniūnxērunt, tantusque est eōrum omnium furor, ut nē Suessiōnēs quidem, frātrēs cōsanguineōsque nostrōs, quī eodem iūre et isdem iēgibus ūtuntur, ūnum imperium ūnumque magistrātum nobiscum habent, dēterrere potuerīmus, quīn cum iīs cōsentiant.

sē: object of permittere. Another sē, which would be the subject of the infinitive, has been omitted to avoid repetition.

sē . . . permittēre: legal term for surrendering.

35. coniūrāsse = coniūrāvisse.

parātōsque esse: not a perfect infinitive.

dare, iuvāre (l. 37): complementary infinitives with parātōs esse.

36. imperāta: participle used as noun.

oppidīs: ablative of means, but translate by in. See note on castris, Bk. I, l. 813.

38. cis: from the Gallic point of view, on the left bank.

incolant: irregular sequence, instead of imperfect. Caesar does not follow the law of sequence very consistently.

sēsē: object of coniūnxisse.

39. tantumque: predicate adjective.

40. ut . . . potuerint (l. 43): result clause with perfect subjunctive instead of imperfect.

nē . . . quidem: notice that this phrase surrounds the word or words emphasized.

Suessiōnēs: how will you decide the case of this word? The Suessiōnēs lived in the neighborhood of the modern Soissons.

frātrēs: appositive to Suessiōnēs.

41. iūre, lēgibus: differ like constitution and laws.

42. ipsis: i.e. Rēmīs.

43. quīn . . . cōsentirent: after negative verbs of hindering (dēterrere) a subjunctive quīn clause is used. Translate from, etc.

iīs: i.e. reliquīs Belgīs.

44. CHAPTER 4. ab iīs: with quaerere the person asked is expressed with ā or ē.

quae . . . possent: object clause after quaereret. Indirect questions take the subjunctive.

45. quid . . . possent: quid is cognate accusative (72) with possent; what they were able = how powerful they were. Compare multum posse.

reperiēbat: imperfect, because he found it out piecemeal.

46. Plērōsque: see 105.

ortōs ā: remoter descent is expressed by a preposition.

Rhēnumque: accusative with the trā- in trāductōs.

47. propter, etc.: with trāductōs.

48. Gallōsque: object of expulisse.

ea loca: notice the irregular plural of locus.

49. sōlōsque: predicate adjective used as a noun, the only ones.

memoriā: see 97; between 107 and 101 B.C. Compare below.

omnī, etc.: ablative absolute expressing circumstance.

50. Teutonōs, etc.: these had invaded Gaul and were making their way into Italy when Marius defeated them in 102 and 101. The "Teutonic terror" was proverbial in Rome, and Caesar skillfully uses it to show the strength of this new enemy.

51. ingredī: complementary infinitive with prohibere (147, a); from invading. The sequence of prohibuerint is irregular.

quā . . . utī: the utī clause is the subject of the infinitive. Literally, from this thing that they . . . came about; freely, the result of this deed was that . . .

rērum: objective genitive. Contrast with patrum, l. 49.

52. sibi: dative of reference (66). Sibi sūmere, to take for one's self = to claim.

53. omnia : object of habēre.

54. habēre explorāta : not explorāvisse, because the result lasts into the time of the speaker.

propinquitatibus : ablative of means.

55. coniūcti : participle with causal force. Translate on account of their connections by . . .

quantam . . . pollicitus sit : indirect question, object of cōgnoverint.

quantam quisque : quisque commonly follows immediately upon an interrogative, reflexive, or relative pronoun.

Page 83. 56. conciliō : distinguish from cōnsiliō.

57. Plūrimum . . . valēre = plūrimum posse.

Bellovacōs : around modern Beauvais.

58. virtūte : ablative of specification (95).

59. armāta : for armātōrum, in agreement with mīlia ; and so ēlēcta.

61. suōs : i.e. Rēmōrum.

62. finēs, agrōs : objects of possidēre.

64. Dīviciācum : distinguish from the Aeduan of the same name.

Galliae : genitive of the whole (55).

cum . . . tum : almost the same as et . . . et.

65. partis : objective genitive with imperium, while regiōnum is genitive of the whole with partis.

66. obtinerit : irregular sequence for obtinuisset.

rēgem : predicate noun, subject Galbam ("the fat man").

67. summam . . . belli : the sum of the war = the chief command.

68. voluntāte : ablative of accordancē (93).

habēre : with Suessiōnēs, understood, as subject.

numerō : ablative of specification.

69. totidem : object of pollicērī understood.

70. maximē ferī : superlative of ferus, which is not compared by endings.

habeantur : habeō and dūcō with infinitive = consider. The tense here is irregular ; so also absint.

71. Atrebātēs, etc. : supply pollicērī. Atrebātēs = "owners, land-holders" ; Ambiānōs = "rivermen," around Amiens.

75. appellantur : the indicative shows that this is a remark of Caesar's.

arbitrārī : sē, referring to the Remi, is to be understood as subject, while pollicērī must be understood as predicate of the other names.

ad : with numbers = about.

77. CHAPTER 5. cohortātus, prōsecūtus: in translating participial constructions, including ablatives absolute, it is often advisable to turn them into independent sentences. So here: encouraged, addressed.

liberāliter: translate as if an adjective modifying orātiōne.

78. senātum: with the force of its etymology (senex), body of Elders.

79. obsidēs: appositive to liberōs.

addūcī: cp. this voice with that of convenīre (l. 78). Iubeō takes the active infinitive when the person commanded is mentioned, otherwise the passive.

Quae omnia: referring to the orders given. A relative at the beginning of a sentence is best translated by a demonstrative with an appropriate conjunction.

80. ad diem: to the day = punctually.

Aeduum: added to distinguish this man from the Diviciacus mentioned in l. 64.

Diviciācum: object of both cohortātus and docet.

81. quantopere . . . intersit: indirect question, object of docet. Verbs of teaching take two objects, of the person and of the thing (73, b). With the impersonal verb interest the person concerned is in the genitive; the degree of interest is expressed by an ablative of degree of difference (89). Quantopere = how much.

82. manūs . . . distinērī: this infinitive phrase is the subject of interest.

83. nē . . . sit: adverb clause of purpose.

cōfligendum sit: gerundive construction expressing necessity (43. 2). The dative of agent (67), sibi, is omitted because Caesar wishes to make the subject general.

84. Id: i.e. manūs distinērī; subject of posse. Notice the difference between the two objects of docet; indirect question (quantopere), infinitive (posse).

sī . . . intrōdūxerint, coeperint: subjunctive perfect, indirect discourse for future perfect indicative. Caesar tries to create a diversion to divide the forces of the enemy.

86. Postquam . . . cōgnōvit: the regular construction with this conjunction (126); translate by pluperfect.

87. cōpiās; subject of venīre which depends on cōgnōvit.

coāctās: equivalent to a clause, after gathering.

Page 84. 88. ab . . . explōrātōribus: with cōgnōvit.

89. flūmen, exercitum (l. 90): objects of trādūcere (73, 2). The Axona is to-day called Aisne.

90. extrēmīs: reckoning from the south.

trādūcere: complementary with mātūrāvit, which is followed by an infinitive, never by an expression of place.

91. ibi: north of the Aisne.

et . . . et . . . et: translate only the last et. In an enumeration the Romans connected either all members or none.

92. rīpīs: plural, because it was necessary to cross the river and then climb the steep bank opposite.

post . . . erant: his lines of communication. What literally?

93. tūta: predicate adjective (102).

commeātūs: subject of possent, but anticipated for effect.

ab Rēmīs: not agency.

94. ut . . . possent: result clause, object of efficiēbat.

95. In: over.

96. alterā: i.e. the left bank.

98. in altitudinem: accusative of limit (75).

pedum: genitive of measure (57, a). As there was generally a fixed ratio of 3:2 between width and depth of a trench, only one dimension need be given.

100. CHAPTER 6. nōmine: ablative of specification (95).

Bibrax: "Beavertown," a name frequent in Gaul, showing that at that time the animal was often found in the country; to-day Mt. Beuvray near Rheims.

101. mīlia: accusative of extent of space (74). Notice that mīlia is a noun followed by a genitive (thousands of paces). In the singular it is an adjective, mīlle passūs. The passus was a double step of 5 feet. Mille passūs = 1 Roman mile, 4850 English feet.

ex itinere: literally, from the march, that is, without making camp or preparing for a siege.

impetū: ablative of manner (91).

102. sustentātum est: impersonal passive, used by the Romans to express an indefinite subject (115). Translate by they, people, one, or you, and an active verb.

103. eadem atque: adjective modifying oppugnātiō. Expressions of identity are followed by atque, and = as. Translate freely by a parenthetical expression: and likewise.

oppugnātiō: translate manner of, etc.

104. Ubi: with coepti sunt and nūdātus est.

circumiectā multitudīne: ablative absolute.

105. moenibus: dative with circumiectā.

coepti sunt: with a passive infinitive coepti is itself put into the passive. Translate freely, they have begun to throw.

106. dēfēnsōribus: ablative of separation (79).

testūdīne: see Introduction, 42.

107. Quod: namely, the actions mentioned. When a relative refers to an infinitive or a clause it is in the neuter.

108. cum . . . conicerent: causal clause. The verb is plural because a crowd consists of many men (114, 1).

109. cōsistendī: gerund in objective genitive after potestās.

nūllī: possessive dative (68). Notice the emphatic position.

110. oppugnandī: see note on cōsistendī, l. 109.

111. nōbilitāte: ablative of description (94). What other case might have been used? See 57.

112. ex iīs: numerals are often used with a prepositional phrase instead of the genitive of the whole (55, a).

lēgātī: appositive to quī.

113. submittātur, posse: indirect discourse after the idea of telling in nūntiōs mittit.

115. CHAPTER 7. isdem: ablative with ūsus (86). It is antecedent of quī, and ducibus is an appositive to it.

116. nūntiū: appositive to quī.

Numidās, etc.: the mention of these unimportant parts of Caesar's army strikingly shows the hopelessness of the Gallic resistance against a man who had at his command the inexhaustible resources of the Roman world. From Africa, Greece, and Spain men had been drafted to serve in northern Europe.

Crētas: Greek form, instead of Crētēs.

117. subsidiō oppidānis: see 69, a.

Rēmīs: dative of reference (66) with accessit. In rendering the sentence, make it the subject, studium the object, and translate accessit by gained.

119. hostibus, etc.: see note on Rēmīs, and treat the sentence in the same way, translating discessit by lost.

potiundī: gerundive instead of gerund with an object (168), potiundī oppidō. Properly only transitive verbs can be so treated, but the construction is extended to some verbs not followed by the accusative.

.120. Itaque, etc.: notice the way in which these statements are subordinated to one another by being expressed in participial phrases. Turn each one into an independent sentence.

122. quō = ad quae.

123. cōpiīs: ablative of accompaniment. The preposition is omitted in certain military terms (90, 1).

ā mīlibus: a difficult expression. It seems that Caesar had intended to write: castra mīlibus passuum (ablative of degree of difference) minus ā (nostrīs castrīs), but changed the expression in a manner similar to that by which diē tertiō ante Kalendās has become ante diem tertium Kalendās. Translate: at a distance of less than two miles from.

124. quae castra: castra, the antecedent of quae, has been attracted into the relative clause (111, 4).

fūmō, etc.: not a hendiadys (171, 1); by the smoke in daytime and by the glare of fire at night.

125. mīlibus: ablative either of degree (89) or of comparison (84).

in lātitudinem: see note on in altitudinem, l. 98. Evidently the Gallic camp was very carelessly constructed, if compared with a Roman camp. Excavations have shown that Caesar's army here occupied a space 2129 by 2137 feet. It numbered about 60,000 men. The enemy, about 300,000 strong (ll. 70-76), should then have occupied a space about 12,000 feet square, that is, about two and one half miles.

127. CHAPTER 8. primō: at first. Distinguish from primum = first, for the first time.

128. virtūtis: objective genitive (54); reputation for valor.

proeliō: ablative of separation with supersedere, which is the object of statuit.

129. quid . . . audērent: indirect questions, objects of periclitābātur.

quid: see note on plūrimum possent, Bk. I, l. 62.

hostis: collective singular.

131. Ubi, etc.: the "skeleton" of this sentence is formed thus: Ubi . . . intellēxit, ab utrōque (l. 137) . . . obdūxit . . . collocāvit (l. 140). This is interrupted by the description of the territory, locō . . . redibat (ll. 131-137).

locō: ablative absolute of circumstance with opportūnō and idōneō as predicate adjectives.

Page 86. 132. ad, etc.: with opportūnō and idōneō, which take either ad with the accusative or the dative of purpose.

nātūrā: ablative of cause. Translate by an adverb.

133. quod, etc.: explains opportūnō.

134. ēditus: participle used as an adjective, agreeing with collis.

tantum: supply locī; accusative of extent (74).

adversus: adjective modifying collis; turned (toward the enemy), in front.

quantum: object of tenēre. It corresponds to tantum. Translate by as and omit the genitive of the whole, locī.

135. ex, etc.: ablative of point of view.

136. lateris dēiectūs: slopes of the side = steep sides.

137. redībat: compare this with ēditus, l. 134. The point of view differs; above, looking from plain to top, here, looking from top to plain.

ab, etc.: see note on ex, l. 135.

138. trānsversam: at right angles to the camp. See Map.

passuum: genitive of measure (57, a).

139. extrēmās: see 105.

tormenta: artillery, that is, engines of war worked by twisted ropes (torī fūnēs). See Introduction, 54.

140. instrūxisset: a subjunctive of implied indirect discourse, showing the reason in Caesar's mind. Otherwise a future perfect would have been used.

141. poterant: indicative, because it is a parenthetical clause.

pugnantēs: with suōs, circumstantial.

142. duābus, etc.: Caesar's regular policy. He fought with seasoned troops only.

143. sī . . . esset: subjunctive of implied indirect discourse, as being the thought in Caesar's mind; originally future.

144. quō = aliquō: after sī, nisi, nē, and num forms with ali- are not used. For case see 87.

opus esset: impersonal, there was need. Opus in this phrase is indicable.

subsidiō: dative of purpose (69).

reliquās: not rest of.

146. ēductās: participle with force of a clause. Translate by independent verb.

147. CHAPTER 9. Palūs: this is formed by a little stream, the Miette.

erat: denotes existence.

148. Hanc: object of trānsirent in the sī clause, but placed before the conjunction for the sake of emphasis.

sī . . . trānsirent: after verbs of trying, waiting, etc., an indirect question introduced by sī is used; to see if, etc. The imperfect subjunctive represents an original future.

exspectābant: imperfect of continued action.

149. autem: postpositive. This word, like enim and quoque, is not found at the beginning of a sentence or clause.

sī . . . fieret: see note on sī trānsirent, l. 148. It depends on the adjective parātī, which has the force of waiting.

150. ut . . . aggrederentur: purpose clause depending on parātī.

impeditōs: participle, with force of a clause; while in difficulties (on account of picking their way through the bog).

151. contendēbātur: impersonal passive. In translating make the words proeliō equestri the subject.

152. faciunt: historical present.

secundiōre: with proeliō, ablative absolute, with the (missing) present participle of esse understood.

153. nostris: dative of reference (66) with secundiōre.

155. quod esse: the infinitive is the subject of dēmōnstrātum est. Quod is made to introduce the relative clause of which dēmōnstrātum est is the predicate. Translate by turning the predicate into an as clause, making the infinitive the predicate of the relative, thus: which, as has been pointed out, was.

157. cōnsiliō: ablative of cause.

sī possent: subjunctive of implied indirect discourse, as part of the plan of the Belgians; originally future. So sī . . . potuissent, l. 159, originally future perfect.

cui: dative with praeerat. This is indicative because it is an explanatory remark of Caesar's. So quī . . . erant, l. 160.

159. minus: parum, minus, minimē, often have the force of nōn.

160. quī: antecedent agrōs.

ūsui: dative of purpose, accompanied by a dative of reference, nōbīs (69, a).

commeātū: ablative of separation.

162. CHAPTER 10. certior factus: see note on l. 3.

163. levis armātūrae: descriptive genitive (57). Translate by an adjective modifying Numidās.

sagittāriōsque: the -que marks the last two kinds of troops as forming one body, otherwise no connective would have been used in the enumeration.

164. ponte: ablative of means with trādūcit, to which the object flūmen should be supplied.

Page 87. 165. pugnātum est: impersonal passive (115). Translate they, with an active tense.

166. aggressī: circumstantial participle. Translate by an independent verb.

occidērunt: note the quantity of the ī and distinguish from occidere. In composition a becomes i, but ae becomes ī.

per: not through. The prepositional phrase modifies trānsire, complementary to cōnantēs. This refers to reliquōs, the object of reppulērunt. Translate cōnantēs by a circumstantial clause of which a pronoun referring to reliquōs should become the subject.

168. reppulērunt: notice the spelling and compare with the perfect of the simple verb pellō.

trānsierant: had (actually) crossed.

169. equitātū: ablative of means with circumventōs.

interfēcērunt: nostrī, l. 165, is the subject.

Hostēs, etc.: in translating this involved sentence it will be best to change the construction and to divide it into a number of small independent statements. Keep in mind that hostēs is subject of cōstituērunt, l. 173, and is to be understood as subject of the verbs intellēxērunt and vīdērunt, which belong to the clause beginning with ubi. This clause, however, extends to coepit.

170. dē . . . trānseundō: prepositional phrases depending on spem. An objective genitive (54) might have been used instead; translate accordingly.

spem: subject of fefellisse, which has sē for its object and is in indirect discourse after intellēxērunt.

171. neque = et nōn.

nostrōs: subject of prōgredi, dependent on vīdērunt.

172. pugnandī: genitive of the gerund with causā, expressing purpose (169, 1 b). Note that in this construction causā always follows the genitive.

ipsōs: object of dēficere, complementary to coepit with rēs as subject.

174. optimum esse: predicate adjective. Revertī and convenīre (l. 176) are the subjects, the whole being the object of cōstituērunt (l. 173).

domum: accusative of limit of motion (75, 1).

quemque: subject of revertī.

175. quōrum: antecedent eōs, l. 176.

intrōdūxissent: subjunctive of indirect discourse, representing a future perfect.

176. ad . . . dēfendendōs: gerundive of purpose, depending on convenīre.

ut . . . ūterentur (l. 178): these are purpose clauses, depending on the sense of the whole clause cōstituērunt . . . convenīre. Insert with the intention.

178. cōpiīs: usually the plural of cōpia means troops. What does it mean here?

sententiam: decision.

179. quod . . . cōgnōverant: substantive clause, explaining haec ratio.

180. finibus: dative with appropinquāre, which takes the dative the same as the adjective propinquus.

181. Hīs: dative, indirect object of persuādērī, the subject of poterat. Intransitive verbs cannot form a personal passive, but can be used only in the third singular with the original dative preserved (64, a). In translating make the dative the subject of a personal construction.

ut . . . ferrent: clause of purpose used as subject of persuādērī. In the active the verb is followed by an object clause, which becomes the subject clause of the passive.

182. neque . . . auxilium ferrent: without aiding. If the writer had wanted to say and not, he would have used nēve.

183. CHAPTER II. vigiliā: ablative of time when. The night was divided into four watches, from sunset to sunrise. At this season the sun set about 9 P.M.

184. castrīs: ablative of separation.

nūllō, etc.: probably ablative absolute expressing manner. Nūllō = sine ūllō.

185. cum . . . properāret: causal clause, modifying fēcērunt.

186. ut . . . vidērētur: object clause of result with fēcērunt.

cōnsimilis: force of con-? What degree of the adjective would have the same force?

187. fugae: see 70.

Caesar: subject of perspēxerat and continuit. Break up the sentence into small statements.

188. per: not ab, to show that they were acting under Caesar's orders.

veritus: the perfect participle of deponent verbs often has the force of a present.

quod . . . perspēxerat: causal, modifies veritus.

quā . . . discēderent: indirect question, object of perspēxerat.

189. exercitum: the Roman army proper, the legions. The cavalry consisted of Gallic auxiliaries. See Bk. I, l. 346.

190. castris: ablative of means; translate by in.

Primā lūce: ablative of time, modifies the ablative absolute expression in cause, cōfirmātā rē.

191. quī . . . morārētur: relative purpose clause.

novissimum agmen: see 105.

194. subsequī: notice the force of sub-, closely.

196. fugientium: circumstantial participle with eōrum; while, etc.

197. Cum . . . sustinērent: circumstantial clause, but almost equivalent to a concession. Translate by while.

ab extrēmō agmine: ablative of point of view (80).

ad quōs: ī must be inserted as antecedent.

ventum erat: impersonal passive, used here to avoid confusion about the subjects.

vidērentur, continērentur: subjunctive, because the reason is not real but only existing in their minds.

neque . . . neque: and . . . neither . . . nor.

200. exauditō . . . ōrdinibus: two ablatives absolute which modify each other. The first gives the reason for the second, which expresses the circumstances under which the pōnēbant takes place. Make the first a prepositional phrase, upon hearing, the second an independent verb.

201. omnēs: referring back to priōrēs.

sibi: dative of reference. Translate by a possessive adjective.

202. tantam . . . quantum: an involved thought. Literally, they killed as great a number as the extent of the day was long; freely, . . . as daylight allowed.

204. sub, etc. : there is no connective (asyndeton). Insert but.

205. erat imperātum : supply iis ; the impersonal passive construction of intransitive verbs (64, a).

206. CHAPTER 12. Postridiē eius diēi : literally, on the next day of this day = on the next day.

priusquam . . . reciperent : subjunctive, because Caesar's intention is indicated. Translate could recover.

207. quī . . . erant. See ll. 40 and 61.

208. Rēmīs : dative with an adjective (70).

magnō itinere : a long march (in one day) = a forced march.

209. Noviodūnum : "Newtown," to-day Soissons. It is appositive to oppidum.

ex itinere : see note on l. 101.

210. quod . . . audiēbat : causal clause, explaining ex itinere.

ab dēfēnsōribus : see 79, a.

212. paucis dēfendentibus : ablative absolute with concessive force. Translate by although.

expugnāre : observe the difference between this word and oppugnāre.

213. vīneās : see Introduction, 52.

quaeque = et (ea) quae.

ad oppugnandum : a gerund. The regular dative of reference accompanying the dative of purpose ūsui would have been ambiguous.

214. ex fugā : grammatically dependent on convēnit, but in sense equivalent to fugientium. Translate accordingly.

216. aggere, turribus : see Introduction, 52.

217. magnitudine, celeritate (l. 218) : casual with permōtī.

218. ante : adverb.

219. mittunt, impetrant (l. 220) : historical presents.

220. petentibus Rēmīs : causal ablative absolute.

ut cōservārentur : object of both petentibus and impetrant. In translating supply a pronoun object with impetrant.

221. CHAPTER 13. obsidibus : appositive to primīs, filiis.

primīs = principibus.

222. Galbae : see l. 66. Thus the Belgian confederacy was deprived of its commander in chief.

223. in dēditionem . . . accipit : literally, receives into surrender ; freely, accepts the surrender of.

224. Bellovacōs: see note on l. 57.

Quī cum = hī autem cum: a relative is often used at the beginning of a sentence instead of a demonstrative to connect it with the preceding sentence.

225. Bratūspantium: for case see note on l. 209.

atque: repeat cum.

227. nātū: ablative of specification (95); greater in respect to birth = elders.

228. sēsē, etc.: indirect discourse after vōce significāre = dīcere. Caesar, of course, did not understand their language, but judged from their tone of voice.

in eius fidem, etc.: come into his protection and power = surrender unconditionally.

puerī: includes both boys and girls.

232. passis manibus: ablative absolute expressing manner. Passis is from pandō.

mōre: ablative of accordance (93), modifies passis.

235. CHAPTER 14. facit verba = dīcit. The rest of the chapter in its original form ran somewhat as follows: Bellovacī . . . fuērunt; impulsī . . . quī dīcebant . . . dēfēcērunt et . . . intulērunt. Quī . . . fuērunt, quod intellegēbant . . . profūgērunt. Petunt . . . Bellovacī . . . Aeduī, ut tuā . . . ūtāris. Quod sī fēcērīs, . . . amplificābis; . . . incidērunt, sustentāre cōsuēvimus. Notice how very little really had to be changed to make the speech direct.

236. in fidē . . . fuisse: had been in the protection and friendship = had been friends and allies.

237. impulsōs . . . intulisse (l. 240): the words impulsōs (Bellovacōs) . . . dēfēcisse et . . . intulisse depend on verba facit; the words Aeduōs . . . perferre depend on dīcerent. Notice the tense of perferre compared with that of dēfēcisse. The prīncipēs said they are enduring, Diviciacus said they have revolted.

240. Quī: supply the antecedent eōs as subject of profūgisce.

cōnsiliū: objective genitive (54) with prīncipēs, which differs in meaning from prīncipibus in l. 237.

241. quod intellegerent: causal clause, referring to profūgisce.

Quantam: indirect question, object of intellegerent.

242. Petere: emphatic position. Translate it was the prayer . . . of.

Page 92. 321. cēdentēs: object of īnsequī. The participle is used as a noun. Translate by a relative clause.

322. primae: here has the force of an adverb.

323. dīmēnsō: participle of dīmētior, with passive force.

325. quod tempus = id tempus quod.

committendī proeliī: gerundive construction in the objective genitive with tempus. Translate by for.

326. convēnerat: from the impersonal verb convenit, it is agreed upon.

ut: notice the mood of the predicates.

aciem ordinēsque: hendiadys, the ranks of their battle line.

327. ipsī: omit in translating.

329. Hīs: i.e. equitibus.

330. ut . . . vidērentur: result clause.

ad: in front of.

331. vidērentur: see note on l. 307.

332. adversō colle: ablative absolute, implying contrast; even up—hill.

in opere: supply mūniendī.

334. CHAPTER 20. The breathless haste made necessary by this surprise is well expressed by the short, jerky sentences, without any connectives. It is worth while to observe how in the description of this battle Caesar always manages to appear just at the critical moment. See beginning of Chs. 21, 25, 26.

Caesari: dative of agent, to be understood with all the gerundives which follow.

vēxillum: a red flag hoisted over the general's quarters. See Introduction, 40.

335. cum . . . oportēret: circumstantial clause.

336. concurrī: impersonal passive infinitive, subject of oportēret.

quī: its (omitted) antecedent eī is subject of arcessendī.

337. aggeris: that is, the material for the rampart.

338. cohortandī: which was regularly done before commencing battle. Note that the gerundive of deponent verbs is passive meaning.

signum: for attack.

340. impediēbat: singular, because the two nominatives form one idea. The time was short because the enemy rushed so rapidly.

difficultātibus: dative of reference with the dative of purpose subsidiō (69, a). Translate by in.

duae rēs: explained by one pair of nouns in apposition (scientia, etc.) and by an explanatory substantive clause (quod . . . vetuerat, l. 344 et seq.).

341. quod . . . poterant (l. 344): a causal clause, explaining scientia atque ūsus.

342. proeliis: ablative of means.

quid . . . oportēret: indirect question (151), object of praescribere and retained object of docērī.

343. ipsi sibi: see note on ipsi, l. 327.

344. singulisque . . . lēgātōs: and from each individual legion its own commander.

345. lēgātōs: vetāre takes a direct object. What is the usual construction with verbs of forbidding? See 147.

nisi mūnitis castris: unless after . . .

346. Hī = lēgātī.

347. nihil: not at all.

348. per sē: on their own responsibility.

quae vidēbantur: supply sibi; what seemed good to them. The relative clause is the object of administrābant.

349. CHAPTER 21. rēbus imperātis: as imperāre takes the thing ordered as its direct object, the passive ablative absolute is a perfectly regular construction.

350. quam partem = ad eam partem quam.

351. decimam: on the left wing. Do you think it was mere accident that Caesar came first to his favorite regiment?

utī . . . sustinērent: these subjunctives represent a quotation (implied indirect discourse) of original commands and prohibitions.

353. neu = nēve: purpose clauses and prohibitions are regularly continued by nēve = et nē (while neque = et nōn). Neu and -que here correspond to the neque . . . et of a statement (on the one hand not . . . but on the other hand).

animō: either an expression of place, without preposition, or ablative of specification.

354. quod . . . aberant: giving the reason for sīgnum dedit.

nōn . . . posset: no farther than whither a missile could be thrown = within range.

355. posset: relative clauses after negative antecedents are in the subjunctive.

356. Atque: and indeed, giving the proof for the statement that the enemy was close by.

alteram: the right wing.

357. pugnantibus: dative with occurrit; he found them fighting.

Temporis, hostium: the position marks these words as emphatic.

358. parātus: adjective.

359. ut . . . dēfuerit (l. 361): result clause. The tense is in irregular sequence, which is often found in result clauses when the result is stated as decisive or final.

insignia, etc.: the officers were distinguished by certain trappings, while they, as well as many soldiers, possessed medals given for bravery. These things were put on before the battle. The helmets were not worn on the march, but carried either over the arm or with the baggage (sarcinae) on a stick. The shields were ornamented with brass and were carried in leather covers to save unnecessary polishing. See Introduction, 25, 27, 51.

360. scūtis: dative of separation (66, b).

361. Quam: with in partem.

362. cāsū: ablative of cause; translate by, etc.

quaeque = et quae.

prima: translate with cōspēxit as if it were an adverb. The standards of the maniples are meant.

365. CHAPTER 22. Instrūctō . . . poterant (l. 372): break this sentence up into several parts. (1) Instrūctō . . . postulābat, (2) cum diversae . . . impedīrētur, (3) neque . . . poterant. In the Latin context the relation of the clauses is as follows: (1) ablative absolute of time; (2) causal clause, giving the consequences arising from (1) and the reason for (3). In translating choose coördinating conjunctions in accordance with this hint.

dēiectus: a noun followed by the genitive collis.

366. necessitās: needs of the moment.

ratio atque ōrdō: theory and practice.

367. diversae: turned from each other.

aliae aliā: one here, one there (113). Aliae is appositive to legiōnēs.

368. saepibus . . . interiectis: ablative absolute expressing means. In translating the participle turn it into a relative clause going with ut . . . dēmōnstrāvimus. For the facts cp. Ch. 17.

370. certa subsidia : reserves in certain places.

quid . . . opus esset : indirect question, subject of prōvidēri.

quid : if the thing needed is expressed by a neuter pronoun, this may be made the subject of the phrase opus est.

372. administrārī : not carried out, but given.

373. iniquitāte : literally, unevenness ; translate diversity.

fortūnae : genitive, with ēventūs.

374. CHAPTER 23. Legiōnis : singular, because Caesar thinks at first only of that legion to which he comes first. His preference for the tenth legion is shown by the fact that in Ch. 21 he did not even mention the ninth.

militēs : subject of compulērunt, interfēcērunt.

375. cursū . . . cōfectōs : modifies Atrebātēs.

cursū ac lassitūdine : hendiadys (171, 1) ; weary from running.

376. exanimātōs : winded.

his : i.e. Atrebātibus.

377. ea pars : i.e. exercitūs Rōmānī.

378. compulērunt : notice the force of the prefix, completely.

cōnantēs : accusative.

379. impeditam : appositional. Translate by while.

trānsire : complementary infinitive, with dubitāre meaning hesitate.

380. iniquum : because now the Romans fought uphill.

381. hostēs : accusative.

382. diversae : as in l. 367, and hence separately.

Page 94. 383. quibuscum : cum is used as an enclitic with personal, reflexive, relative, and interrogative pronouns.

384. ex locō superiōre : the Romans were on the upper part of the river bank.

385. proeliābantur : progressive.

ā fronte et ā sinistrā parte : ablatives of point of view.

386. nūdātis : supply dēfēnsōribus, an ablative of separation.

on Cum . . . cōstitisset : circumstantial (129). For number see note 1. 374.

387. intervallō : ablative of measure.

388. cōfertissimō agmine : ablative of manner.

Bo duce Boduognātō : ablative absolute ; Boduognatus being leader, under Boduognatus's leadership.

389. summam imperiī : see note on summam bellī, l. 67.

390. ab apertō latere: see note on ā fronte, l. 385. The right side was shieldless.

391. summum . . . locum: the camp, as usual, was on the slope of the hill, hence the rear was higher than the front.

392. CHAPTER 24. levisque armātūrae: descriptive genitive; translate as an adjective.

393. quī . . . fuerant: see l. 316.

quōs: referring to equitēs, peditēs.

394. pulsōs: supply esse.

cum . . . recipere: circumstantial; while retreating.

395. adversis: face to face. The cavalry had run away and was now rallied near the camp, and met the enemy entering it.

396. decumānā portā: see the plan of a Roman camp, Introduction, 48.

ac summō iugō: the baggage train had only partly entered the camp

397. victōrēs: appositive to nostrōs.

398. cum respēxissent: circumstantial; upon looking back . . . and seeing.

400. eōrum: with clāmor. Translate by from.

401. oriēbātur: singular, because clāmor fremitusque forms one idea. The shouting of the men and the noise of the beasts and wagons blend into one confused uproar.

aliique, etc.: see note on l. 367.

402. ferēbantur: were carried = rushed.

403. Trēverī: in the valley of the Moselle. The name survives in the name of the city of Trèves. The word is here used as an adjective.

404. virtūtis: objective genitive, with opīniō; reputation for bravery.

auxiliī causā: with missī.

405. cum: conjunction, with vīdisent. In itself it might be a preposition, but the subjunctive vīdisent (l. 408) demands a conjunction to introduce it. It is circumstantial; for translation see note on l. 394.

406. circumventās tenērī: the perfect participle with habēre and tenēre denotes that the action has been completed, but that its effect continues. Translate held almost completely outflanked.

407. cālōnēs, etc.: the lack of connectives is regular in enumeration where either all parts are connected or none. Here it is certainly meant to paint the excited confusion of the battlefield.

408. dēspērātis, etc.: our circumstances having been despaired of = despairing of our success. In the active, dēspērāre takes dē, but the ablative absolute is used as if it were a transitive verb.

409. Rōmānōs: indirect discourse after renūntiāvērunt.

410. castris: with potītōs.

412. CHAPTER 25. Caesar, etc.: this sentence, the longest found in Caesar, must be broken up as follows: (1) to profectus; (2) to vīdit; (3) to āmissō, treating all ablatives absolute as independent sentences; (4) to occīsīs; (5) to posset, as a parenthesis; (6) to vītāre; (7) to vīdit, which should be omitted in translating; (8) to posset; (9) to venerat; (10) to prōcessit; (11) to appellātis; (12) to cohortātus; (13) to end of sentence. Keep in mind that beginning with ubi (l. 413) everything depends upon vīdit (l. 415), which is repeated in l. 424 to refresh the reader's memory.

Caesar: subject of prōcessit (l. 426), and iussit (l. 428). See note on l. 334.

414. collātis: crowded.

sibi ipsōs: see note on l. 327.

Page 95. 418. prīmipilō: see Introduction, 30.

419. Baculō: probably a nickname ("Mr. Cane") given to the man the soldiers because he used his sign of office too freely.

gravibusque: an adjective modifying the same noun as multus is connected with multus by et or -que. Omit the conjunction.

421. ab novissimis: ablative of point of view.

dēsertō locō: ablative absolute.

proeliō: ablative of separation.

422. ā fronte: ablative of point of view.

424. in angustō: in a tight place.

vīdit: omit.

425. ab novissimis: see note on l. 421.

militi: dative of separation (66, b).

428. signa inferre: by doing this the formation would be made open and the soldiers would have elbowroom.

quō: see 123, 3.

429. Cuius: i.e. Caesaris.

430. militibus: dative with illātā.

cum . . . cuperet: causal clause.

431. in extrēmīs suis rēbus: in his own desperate circumstances = at the greatest personal risk.

433. CHAPTER 26. Caesar: see note on l. 334.

cum . . . vidisset: circumstantial; upon noticing.

434. tribūnōs: see Introduction, 32.

435. ut . . . inferrent: purpose clauses, representing an original command.

conversa signa . . . inferrent: signa is object of inferrent. By turning the standards, the front would naturally be changed; hence, should wheel and attack.

436. aliīs aliī: see note on l. 367.

437. nē . . . circumvenirentur: see 146.

āversī: turned away = from the rear. The legions were now standing back to back.

440. proeliō nūntiātō: ablative absolute expressing cause or time.

441. cursū incitātō: ablative absolute expressing manner.

442. cōspiciēbantur: the imperfect here denotes the beginning of the action.

Labiēnus: see l. 373, where the commander, however, was not mentioned.

443. quae . . . gererentur: indirect question, object of cōspicātus.

445. Quī: referring in thought to the individual soldiers, and therefore in "construction according to sense" not agreeing with legiōnem.

quō . . . esset: in what critical situation.

quō . . . versārētur (l. 447): indirect questions, objects of cōgnōvissent.

Page 96. 447. versārētur: agreeing only with the last and most important subject. In this way the personal relation of the tenth legion to Caesar is emphasized.

450. CHAPTER 27. ut . . . redintegrarent, occurrerent, praeferrent: result.

etiam quī: supply eī.

prōcubuissent: subjunctive by attraction (160).

451. scūtīs: ablative with innīxī.

452. inermēs: agreeing with cālōnēs.

453. ut . . . dēlerent: purpose clause referring to praeferrent.

454. in: the preposition is usually omitted in this phrase.

militibus: indirect object with praeferrent.

455. in extrēmā spē salūtis: at the end of their hope for safety = at the last ditch, without any hope.

456. praestitērunt: notice that this verb is here transitive, with virtūtem as object. See Vocabulary.

ut . . . pugnārent: how do you decide whether this is purpose or result?

cum . . . cecidissent: circumstantial.

457. iacentibus: dative with īnsisterent.

458. his: i.e. proximīs.

459. quī superessent: supply eī; subjunctive by attraction (160).

ut: adverb, as.

460. conicerent, remitterent: supply the ut from l. 456.

ut . . . dēbēret: result clause depending on, and drawing the conclusion from, all the preceding facts.

nōn nēququam: with ausōs esse.

461. virtūtis: descriptive genitive.

iūdicārī dēbēret: infinitive of an impersonal passive; one ought to judge.

462. trānsire, ascendere, subire: complementary to ausōs esse.

463. quae: referring to the infinitives and therefore neuter. It is object of redēgerat, with facilia as predicate accusative (73, c).

ex: instead of.

466. CHAPTER 28. redāctō: agreeing with nōmine, but referring also to gente.

quōs . . . dixerāmus: when, as here, a relative clause contains a verb of saying on which the rest of the clause depends, the verb of saying should be made parenthetical, and the infinitive should be translated as a finite verb. For the facts, see l. 272.

468. cum . . . arbitrārentur: causal clause.

Victōribus, victis: datives of reference. Literally, nothing hindered for the victors, nothing safe for the conquered; freely, no barrier for the conquerors, no safety for the defeated.

469. impeditum, tūtum: supply esse.

472. ad trēs, etc.: the statement was decidedly exaggerated. Five years later they again put 6,000 men in the field against the Romans.

473. vix: with quīngentōs.

474. ut . . . vidērētur: purpose. This clemency was probably not merely due to policy, but influenced by Caesar's sincere respect for the bravery of the Nervii. See ll. 460-464.

476. finitimis: indirect object of imperāvit, the direct object of which is the ut clause. Notice the difference in construction of the two verbs of commanding, iubeō and imperō.

cum . . . venirent: circumstantial; while.

479. cōpiis: ablative of accompaniment, without a preposition.

ex itinere: that is, immediately.

482. cum . . . habēret: concessive.

ex . . . pārtibus, ex parte: ablatives of point of view.

in circuitū: a prepositional phrase, used almost like an adjective; all around.

486. tum: now. In a narrative the words of time are used as if from the point of the speaker. When Caesar wrote, it was then.

487. collocābant: progressive.

Ipsī: i.e. Aduatucī.

488. Cimbris: ablative of origin (81, 1).

cum . . . facerent: circumstantial. Turn into a phrase, on their march. See Bk. I, l. 799.

489. iis impedimentis: ablative absolute with dēpositis, l. 491.

490. agere ac portāre: two verbs, one referring to cattle and slaves, the other to things. Translate by the one verb transport.

citrā: on the Gallic side.

491. cūstōdiae, praesidiō: datives of purpose.

492. eōrum: i.e. Cimbrōrum.

493. cum . . . dēfenderent: circumstantial clause, explaining exagitātī.

aliās . . . aliās: adverbs.

494. illātum dēfenderent: supply bellum. Literally, warded off (a war) made on (them); freely, waged now offensive, now defensive wars.

496. CHAPTER 30. Ac: and indeed.

adventū: ablative of time.

497. parvulisque proeliis: very small fights = skirmishes.

498. pēdum: must be understood both with XII and with XV mīlium, since the rampart certainly was not 15 miles long. It is not repeated after mīlium, because it would produce a disagreeable similarity of sound.

499. circummūnītī: by Caesar.

oppidō: ablative of means. Translate by in.

501. irridēre, increpitāre: historical infinitives (165).

502. ā tantō spatiō = tantō spatiō (ablative of degree of difference) ā (sē): see note on l. 123.

503. instituerētur: the subjunctive is used because this is part of their sneers.

Quibusnam, etc.: this is a question in indirect discourse, of which cōfīderent, l. 507, is the predicate (for cōfīditis). Do not confuse with an indirect question, which must be introduced by a verb.

504. hominēs: in apposition to the subject of cōfīderent.

tantulae: the ending -ulus makes diminutives (see parvulīs, l. 497); so little great = so small.

505. prae: in comparison with, on account of. In translating the parenthesis make Gallīs the subject, turn contemptuī into a verbal predicate, and make brevitās the object.

506. in mūrō: verbs of placing often have an ablative of place where, instead of an accusative of place to which. The Aduatuci probably never had seen a tower on wheels, and wondered how the Romans would lift it up and place it at the wall.

*mu*st be supplied as subject.

509. speciē: from root spec-, see.

510. quī, etc.: the predicate is dīxērunt, l. 514. This verb governs the words sē . . . permittere (l. 513), while locūtī, l. 510, governs the words Nōn . . . possent (ll. 510-513). In these, again, the words Rōmānōs . . . gerere depend on existimāre.

511. quī . . . possent (l. 513): relative clause with causal force (l. 513).

513. sē . . . omnia: object of permittere. A second sē as subject of permittere is omitted to avoid repetition. The phrase means sur-render unconditionally.

514. Ūnum: object of the following infinitives, with subject sē understood.

prō: in accordance with.

suā: i.e. Caesaris. Translate his usual.

515. statuisset: subjunctive in indirect discourse, for the future perfect.

516. nē . . . dēspoliāret: explains ūnum.

sē: i.e. Aduatucōs.

armīs: ablative of separation.

517. Sibi: with inimīcōs.

517. virtūtī: see 64.

518. possent: for the future.

519. Sibi: dative of reference with praestāre (from the impersonal praestat, it is better). The infinitives patī, interficī are the subjects of praestāre.

dēdūcerentur: for the future or for present subjunctive.

520. quamvis: from the pronoun quīvīs.

fortūnam: meaning?

ā: introducing an ablative of agent, because patī = be treated.

Translate at the hands of.

quam: adverb with a comparative, since praestāre = melius esse.

hīs: antecedent of quōs.

521. per: expressing manner.

522. CHAPTER 32. cōsuētūdine . . . meritō: ablatives of cause.

523. eōrum: with meritō.

524. ariēs: see Introduction, 52.

attigisset, dēdidissent: for the future perfect.

525. nisi: except.

527. nē . . . inferrent: object clause with imperātūrum.

528. quae imperārentur: object of facere. For the passive construction see note on l. 349. Instead of the present infinitive we should have expected the future.

531. summam . . . altitudinem: the highest height = the top.

534. patefactis: those compounds of faciō which are not made with prepositions retain the use of fīō as passive.

536. CHAPTER 33. nē . . . acciperent: purpose. Caesar's regard for the safety of the surrendered serves to show their treachery in the worst light.

quam: since a negative purpose clause must be introduced by nē, a compound negative used in it must be resolved into its parts; nobody = that not anybody, etc.

537. ante: adverb.

initō: ablative absolute with cōnsiliō.

intellēctum est: impersonal passive. Supply later.

Page 99. 539. dēnique: at least.

540. partim, partim: see Vocabulary.

cum: the preposition expresses possession.

541. scūtis, vīminibus: ablatives absolute, but equivalent in meaning to cum armīs.

542. pellibus : ablative of means.

543. quā : adverb of place.

• 546. ignibus : fire signals were often employed. Monuments show a torch stuck out from a fort.

547. concursum, pugnātum : impersonal.

548. in extrēmā, etc. : see note on l. 455.

ut . . . pugnārī dēbuit : do not allow the ita (l. 547) to mislead you into assuming a result clause. What makes this impossible ?

549. turribus : none had been mentioned, but towers always, and at regular intervals, strengthened the vāllum.

550. iacerent : subjunctive in a characteristic relative clause, after indefinite antecedent.

dēbuit : in translating make virīs the subject and turn pugnārī into the active. Remember that ought is a defective verb and that the time of dēbuit must be shown in the translation.

cum . . . cōsisteret : causal clause.

551. ad hominum mīlibus : the preposition is used adverbially. This use probably arose from an original hominum mīlibus ad. See note on ā tantō spatiō, l. 502.

553. cum . . . dēfenderet : causal clause.

nēmō : note the emphatic position. Iam with a negative may be translated longer.

554. sectionem : see Vocabulary.

555. capitum = hominum : cp. the use of souls in English.

556. mīlium : predicate genitive of measure.

557. CHAPTER 34. ā P. Crassō : ablative of agent with certior factus,

1- 560. For Crassus see note on adulēscēns, Bk. I, l. 1082.

558. Venetōs : "kinsmen." Also Venellōs, diminutive of Venetī; Coriosolitēs, "the watchers of the army"; Esuviōs, "sons of Esus," the Gallic war god; Redonēs, "charioteers." The names survive in the modern Vennes, Corseult, Rennes.

559. quae : agreeing with civitatēs, but referring to the names mentioned. A pronoun subject is regularly made to agree with its predicate noun.

561. in diciōnem : see Vocabulary.

563. CHAPTER 35. pācātā : what literally ?

565. incolerent : subjunctive by attraction (160).

566. quae . . . pollicērentur : purpose clause.

sē : what is the gender ? Why ?

a. The locative sing. ends in -ī; as, Corinthī, at Corinth: the locative plu. in -īs; as, Delphīs, at Delphi.

b. Nouns in -ius may have the gen. sing. in -ī instead of -īi and the vocative ends in -ī instead of -ie. Nouns in -ium may have the gen. sing. in -ī. The accent remains as though the longer form were used; as, imper'ī.

c. Rule for Gender: Nouns in -um are neuter; others are masculine.

Exceptions: Locus, m., place, has its plu. loca, n., places. Vulgus, crowd, is generally neuter.

COMPARISON OF ADJECTIVES

14. a. Adjectives are regularly compared by adding to the base (the genitive singular minus the ending) -ior for the comparative and -issimus for the superlative; as, nōbilis, nōbrior, nōbilissimus.

b. Adjectives in -er form their comparatives regularly, but their superlatives by adding -rimus to the masculine nominative of the positive; as, ācer, ācrior, ācerrimus.

c. Six adjectives in -lis form their comparatives regularly, but their superlatives by adding -limus to the base; as, facilis, facior, facillimus. The six adjectives are: facilis, easy; similis, like; humilis, low; difficilis, difficult; dissimilis, unlike; gracilis, slender.

Other adjectives in -lis are compared regularly.

15. IRREGULAR COMPARISON OF ADJECTIVES

bonus,	melior,	optimus,	good, better, best. malus,	peior,	pessimus,	bad, worse, worst. magnus,	maior,	maximus,	great, greater, greatest. parvus,	minor,	minimus,	small, less, least.
multus,	plūs,	plūrimus,	much, more, most.

16. Of the following the positive forms are rare:

(exterus),	exterior,	extrēmus (or extimus),	outer, outmost.
(inferus),	inferior,	infimus (or īmus),	lower, lowest.
(posterus),	posterior,	postrēmus (or postumus),	latter, last.
(superus),	superior,	suprēmus (or summus),	higher, highest.

17. Of the following the positive is lacking :

citerior, citimus, hither, hithermost;
 interior, intimus, inner, inmost.
 prior, primus, former, first.
 propior, proximus, nearer, next.
 ulterior, ultimus, farther, farthest.

18. COMPARISON BY ADVERBS

Adjectives ending in -us following a vowel (and some others) form their comparatives by the use of magis, more, and their superlatives by the use of maximē, most; as, frūmentārius, magis frūmentārius, maximē frūmentārius.

FORMATION AND COMPARISON OF ADVERBS

19. Most adverbs are formed from adjectives as follows : —

1. Positive. a. Most adjectives of the first-and-second declension form a corresponding adverb by adding -ē to their bases, e.g., adjective, lātus ; adverb, lātē.

b. Most adjectives of the third declension having two or three endings in the nominative singular form a corresponding adverb by adding -iter to their bases, e.g., adjective, fortis, -e ; adverb, fortiter.

c. Most adjectives of the third declension having one ending in the nominative singular form a corresponding adverb by adding -ter to their bases ; a final t of the base is dropped, e.g., adjective, potēns, potentis ; adverb, potenter.

2. Comparative. The comparative of an adverb is always the neuter singular accusative of the corresponding adjective, e.g., adjective, lātior ; adverb, lātius.

3. Superlative. The superlative of an adverb is always the base of the superlative of the adjective + ē, e.g., adjective, lātissimus ; adverb, lātissimē.

IRREGULAR COMPARISON OF ADVERBS

20. bene,	melius,	optimē, well, better, best. male,	peius,	pessimē, ill, worse, worst.
diū,	diūtius,	diūtissimē, long (of time), longer, longest.
facile,	facilius,	facillimē, easily, more easily, most easily.
(magnopere),	magis,	maximē, greatly, more, most. multum,	plūs,	plūrimum, much, more, most.
nūper,	—	nūperrimē, recently, most recently.
parum,	minus,	minimē, too little, less, least. prope,	propius,	proximē, near, nearer, next.
saepe,	saepius,	saepissimē, often, more often, most often.

a. Numbers made up of two or more orders are expressed as follows :

1. When tens and units are combined, either the units and et precede the tens, as, ūnus et vigintī, one and twenty; or the tens precede the units without et, as, vigintī ūnus, twenty-one.

2. In other combinations of two numbers, the larger precedes the smaller, with or without et, as, centum (et) decem, one hundred and ten.

3. In combinations of three or more numbers, the order is the same as in English, without et, as, tria milia ducentī trīgintā quattuor, three thousand two hundred and thirty-four.

SYNTAX

AGREEMENT OF NOUNS

49. RULE. An appositive or a predicate noun agrees in case with the word it modifies; as, persuādet Casticō Sēquanō, he persuades Casticus the Sequanian (I, 52); quī Celtae appellantur, who are called Celts (I, 2).

CASES

NOMINATIVE

Nominative as Subject

50. RULE. The subject of a finite verb is in the nominative case; as, Gallia est omnis dīvisa in partēs trēs, Gaul as a whole is divided in three parts (I, 1).

GENITIVE

Genitive with Nouns

51. GENERAL RULE. A noun modifying another noun and not meaning the same thing may be put in the genitive case.

Possessive Genitive

52. RULE. The genitive may be used to denote that to which something belongs; as, finibus Belgārum, by the territory of the Belgians (I, 17); huius potentiae causā, for the sake of this power (I, 332).

a. This genitive may be used predicatively; as, iūdicium est imperātōris, the decision is the general's (I, 849).

Subjective Genitive

53. RULE. The subjective genitive denotes the person or thing that does something or has a feeling; as, occāsus sōlis, the setting of the sun (I, 24).

Objective Genitive

54. RULE. The objective genitive denotes the object of an action or feeling; as, rēgnī cupiditās, the desire (of) for royal power (I, 27).

Genitive of the Whole

55. RULE. The genitive is used to denote the whole of which a part is mentioned. This genitive may depend on any noun, pronoun, adjective, or adverb which suggests part of the whole; as, hōrum omnium fortissimī sunt Belgae, the Belgians are the bravest of all these (I, 6); eōrum ūna pars, one part of these (I, 15); satis causae, sufficient (of) reason (I, 354).

a. Instead of this genitive, dē or ex with the ablative is generally used with cardinal numerals and with quīdam, and may be used with paucī and with superlative adjectives; as, ūnus ē filiis captus est, one of his sons was captured (I, 492); paucī dē nostris, a few of our men (I, 272); proximī ex Belgis, the nearest of the Belgians (II, 30).

Genitive of Material

56. RULE. The genitive may express the material of which a thing consists; as, multitudinem hominum, a large number of men (I, 76).

Descriptive Genitive

57. RULE. The genitive modified by an adjective may be used to describe a person or thing; as, trium mēnsium molita cibāria, meal for three months (I, 87); hominēs magnae virtūtis, men of great bravery (II, 260).

a. When the adjective of this construction is a numeral, the genitive is called a genitive of measure.

b. This genitive may be used predicatively; as, flūminis erat altitūdō pedum trium, the river's depth was three feet (II, 307).

c. With sum and verbs of rating, indefinite value is expressed by the genitive; as, tantī eius grātiā esse ostendit, he showed that his good will was of such (value) (I, 384).

Genitive with Adjectives

58. RULE. The genitive may be used with some adjectives denoting desire, knowledge, memory, skill, fullness and their opposites; as, bellandī cupidus, fond of warring (I, 38).

Genitive with Verbs

59. RULE. The genitive may be used with verbs of remembering, forgetting, and reminding; as, reminiscerētur veteris incommodī, he should bear in mind the old disaster (I, 231).

60. RULE. The impersonal verb interest governs a genitive case; as, rei pūblīcae interest, it concerns the state (II, 81).

61. RULE. The impersonal verbs miseret, paenitet, piget, pudet and taedet take the accusative of the person affected and the genitive of the cause of the feeling; as, quōrum eōs paenitet, of which (it repents them) they repent (IV, 5, 3).

62. RULE. The genitive may be used with potior (but see § 86); as, tōtius Gallīae potiri, to obtain control of all Gaul (I, 30).

DATIVE

Dative of Indirect Object

63. RULE. The indirect object denotes the person or thing that is indirectly affected by the action of the verb.

a. Many transitive verbs govern an indirect object in addition to a direct object; as, eī filiam dat, he gives him his daughter (I, 59).

Dative with Special Verbs

64. Many verbs transitive in English are intransitive in Latin and therefore must take an indirect object instead of a direct object, as shown by the following: —

RULE. The dative is used with many verbs meaning benefit or injure, command or obey, please or displease, serve or resist, trust or distrust; also believe, envy, favor, pardon, persuade, spare, threaten and the like; as, civitatī persuāsit, he persuaded the state (I, 28).

a. The above verbs, when used passively, must be impersonal; as, mihi persuādētur, (it is persuaded to me) I am persuaded (I, 792).

b. The dative is also used with phrases that have a meaning equivalent to the above; as, nōn erunt dictō audientēs milītēs, the soldiers will not (be listening to) heed the command (I, 784).

c. Some of the (generally intransitive) verbs may take a direct object along with the indirect; as, id iīs persuāsit, he persuaded (this to them) them of this (I, 30).

d. Note that dēlectō, delight, iubeō, command, iuvō, please, vetō, forbid, are transitive and therefore are exceptions to the rule; as, eōs frūmentō iuvant, they help them with grain (I, 499).

Dative with Compound Verbs

65. Some verbs when compounded with certain prepositions take on a meaning which requires a dative. When one of these prepositions is compounded with a transitive verb, there may be both a dative and an accusative.

RULE. The dative of the indirect object is used with some verbs compounded with ad, ante, con, in, inter, ob, post, prae, prō, sub, super, and sometimes with circum; as, omnibus praestant, they surpass all (I, 29); finitimis bellum inferre possunt, they are able to make war on the neighbors (I, 37).

a. But note that aggredior, conveniō, incendō, intercludō, interficiō, oppugnō and many others do not govern the dative; as, quī cum eum convēnissent, and when they had met him (I, 503).

Dative of Reference

66. RULE. The dative may denote the person with reference to whom a statement is true; as, molita cibāria sibi quemque efferre iubent, they order each one to carry meal for himself (I, 87).

a. This dative is sometimes equivalent in meaning to a possessive genitive; as, sēsē Caesarī ad pedēs prōiēcērunt, they threw themselves at Caesar's feet (I, 565).

b. This dative, when used with verbs of taking away, is best translated with from and may be called a dative of separation; as, Aeduīs libertātem ēripient, they will take away liberty from the Aeduans (I, 310).

Dative of Agent

67. RULE. The dative is used with the passive periphrastic conjugation to denote the person who has the thing to do; as, nōn expectandum (esse) sibi statuit, he decided that (it must not be waited by him) he must not wait (I, 195).

Dative of Possessor

68. RULE. The dative is used with forms of sum to denote the possessor, the thing possessed being the subject; as, dēmōnstrant sibi nihil esse, they prove that (nothing is to them) they have nothing (I, 193).

a. This construction emphasizes the thing possessed, while the genitive of possession (§ 52) emphasizes the person possessing.

Dative of Purpose (or Service)

69. RULE. The dative may be used to express the purpose for which an action is done or which a thing serves; as, locum domiciliō dēligunt, they choose a place for an abode (I, 553).

a. This dative is often used with a dative of reference (§ 66) denoting the person affected; as, quem auxiliō Caesarī Aedui miserant, whom the Aeduans had sent as an aid to Caesar (I, 346).

b. This dative, when used with forms of sum, is best translated as a predicate noun or with the word as; as, Galliis impedimentō erat, it was a hindrance to the Gauls (I, 454).

Dative with Adjectives

70. RULE. The dative may be used with adjectives meaning near; also fit, friendly, pleasing, similar, and the like, with their opposites; as, proximī sunt Germānīs, they are nearest to the Germans (I, 10).

a. Propior and proximus, and the adverbs propius and proximē, may govern the accusative like prepositions; as, proximī Rhēnum, nearest the Rhine (I, 1112).

ACCUSATIVE

Accusative of Direct Object

71. RULE. The direct object of a verb is put in the accusative case; as, quārum ūnam incolunt Belgae, of which the Belgians inhabit one (I, 1).

Cognate Accusative

72. RULE. Some verbs may take an accusative of a noun or pronoun of related meaning; as, cum trīduī viam prōcessisset, when he had advanced a three days' march (I, 728).

Two Accusatives with Verbs

73. a. Two Accusatives with Compound Verbs.

RULE. 1. Some intransitive verbs, when compounded with circum and trāns, become transitive and take an accusative of the direct object; as, ea pars nōndum flūmen trānsierat, this section had not yet crossed the river (I, 205).

RULE. 2. Some transitive verbs, when so compounded, may take two accusatives, one the object of the verb and one the object of the preposition ; as, trēs partēs cōpiārum id flūmen trādūxērunt, they have led three fourths of the forces across this river (I, 202).

b. Two Accusatives, one of the Person, one of the Thing.

RULE. Verbs of asking, demanding, and teaching may take two accusatives, one of the person, one of the thing ; as, Aeduōs frūmentum flāgitāre, he kept demanding grain of the Aeduans (I, 282).

i. Verbs of asking and demanding frequently express the person by the ablative with a preposition (so always petō and quaerō) ; as, quaerit ex sōlō ea, he asks these questions from him alone (I, 320).

c. Two Accusatives of the Same Person or Thing.

RULE. Verbs of making, choosing, calling, regarding, showing, and the like may take a direct object and a predicate accusative, both referring to the same person or thing ; as, eum vergobretum appellant Aeduī, the Aeduans call this man "vergobret" (I, 295).

i. In the passive, the direct object becomes the subject and the predicate accusative becomes a predicate nominative ; as, is vergobretus appellātur ab Aeduīs, this man is called "vergobret" by the Aeduans.

Accusative of Extent

74. RULE. Duration of time and extent of space are expressed by the accusative without a preposition ; as, rēgnum multōs annōs obtinuerat, he had held the royal power many years (I, 53).

i. Adverbs are sometimes used to denote extent in amount ; as, plūrimum possunt, they are the most powerful (I, 62) ; minimum potest, he has very little power (I, 374).

Accusative of Limit of Motion or Place to Which

75. RULE. Limit of motion is expressed by the accusative with ad, in, or sub ; as, ad iūdicium omnem suam familiam cōēgit, he brought to the trial all his retinue (I, 71).

i. But names of towns and the word domus omit the preposition ; as, Rōmam vēnit, he came to Rome (I, 591).

a. Ad is sometimes used with names of towns with the meaning of towards or near ; as, ad Genavam pervenit, he arrives near Geneva (I, 114).

Subject Accusative

76. RULE. The subject of an infinitive is put in the accusative case ; as, quam Gallōs obtinēre dictum est, which it has been said the Gauls occupy (I, 15).

VOCATIVE

Nominative of Address

77. RULE. The name of the person or thing addressed is put in the vocative case; as, dēsilīte, commilitōnēs, jump down, comrades (IV, 25, 6).

ABLATIVE

Ablative of Place from Which

78. RULE. Place from which is expressed by the ablative, usually with ab, dē, or ex; as, ut dē finibus suis exirent, that they go out from their territory (I, 28).

1. But names of towns and the word domus omit the preposition; as, domō exire possunt, they are able to go out from home (I, 94).

a. Ab is sometimes used with names of towns with the meaning of from near, from the vicinity of; as, ab Ocelō pervenit, he comes from near Ocelum (I, 175).

Ablative of Separation

79. RULE. Separation may be expressed by the ablative with or without ab, dē, or ex.

a. This construction is used with both verbs and adjectives of depriving, excluding, freeing, lacking, and the like; as, Gallōs ab Aquitānīs Garumna dividit, the Garonne separates the Gauls from the Aquitanians (I, 4); cum suis finibus eōs prohibent, when they keep them away from their own territory (I, 14); id oppidum vacuum ab dēfēnsōribus esse audiēbat, he heard that this town was stripped of defenders (II, 209).

Ablative of Point of View

80. RULE. The ablative with ab or ex may be used to denote the position from which something is done or is true; as, continentur unā ex parte, they are hemmed in on one side (I, 31).

Ablative of Source or Origin

81. RULE. Source or origin is expressed by the ablative with or without ab, dē, or ex; as, quaerit ex sōlō ea, he asks these questions from him alone (I, 320).

1. Here also may be found the ablatives that denote parentage and material; as, ortī ā Germānis, sprung from the Germans (II, 46); nāvēs factae ex rōbore, ships made out of oak (III, 13, 3).

Ablative of Agent

82. RULE. Agency with a passive verb is usually expressed by the ablative with ab; as, ā senātū amicus appellātus erat, he had been called friend by the senate (I, 54).

For the dative of agent see § 67.

Ablative of Cause

83. RULE. Cause may be expressed by the ablative, usually without a preposition; as, grātiā plūrimum poterat, he was very powerful because of his popularity (I, 152).

1. Cause is frequently expressed by ob or propter with the accusative; as, ob eam rem incitāta, stirred up on account of this matter (I, 75).

Ablative of Comparison

84. RULE. The ablative without a preposition may be used after comparatives in place of quam with the nominative or accusative; as, nōn amplius quīnis mīlibus passuum, not more than five miles (I, 280).

1. When quam is used the two nouns compared are in the same case; as, nōn minōrem laudem exercitus quam imperātor meritis est, the army deserved no less praise than the general (I, 800).

2. Plūs, minus, amplius, and longius are often used for plūs quam, minus quam, etc; as, flūmen nōn amplius mīlia passuum X abest, the river is not more than ten miles distant (II, 266).

Ablative of Means

85. RULE. Means or instrument is expressed by the ablative without a preposition; as, ūna pars continētur flūmine, one section is bounded by a river (I, 17).

1. Here also may be found such expressions as: proeliis contendere, to contend in battles (I, 13); insidiis nīti, to rely on ambushes (I, 237); frūmentum flūmine nāvibus subvehere, to bring grain up (by) the river in (by) ships (I, 287); castris sē tenēre, to keep in camp (I, 813).

Ablative with Deponent Verbs

86. RULE. The ablative is used with ūtor, fruor, fungor, potior, and vēscor and their compounds; as, imperio potiri, to get control of the government (I, 30); eodem usi consilio, adopting the same plan (I, 89).

1. But potior may be used with the genitive. See § 62.

Ablative with opus and usus

87. RULE. Opus est and usus est, meaning there is need, may take the ablative; as, si quo subsidio opus esset, if there should be need of any help (II, 143).

Ablative of Price

88. RULE. With verbs of buying and selling, price is denoted by the ablative without a preposition; as, parvo pretio redempta, bought at a low price (I, 326).

Ablative of Degree of Difference

89. RULE. The ablative without a preposition is used with comparatives and words implying comparison to denote the degree of difference; as, multo facilius, (easier by much) much easier (I, 99); paucis ante diebus, (before by a few days) a few days before (I, 344).

Ablative of Accompaniment

90. RULE. Accompaniment is expressed by the ablative with cum; as, cum proximis civitatibus pacem confirmare, to establish peace with the nearest states (I, 47).

1. In military language, the cum may be omitted if the noun is modified by a word that is not a numeral; as, Caesar subsequēbatur omnibus copiis, Caesar followed with all his troops (II, 309).

Ablative of Manner

91. RULE. Manner is expressed by the ablative with cum or a modifier, rarely with both; as, in Italiam magnis itineribus contendit, he hurried into Italy with forced marches (I, 169).

1. The preposition and modifier are regularly omitted with iniuriā and iniussū; as, iniussū suō, without his order (I, 352).

2. Sine is sometimes used; as, sine maleficio iter facere, to make the trip without mischief (I, 120).

Ablative of Attendant Circumstance

92. RULE. The ablative without a preposition is used to express the attendant circumstances of an act or condition; as, imperio populī Rōmānī, under the control of the Roman people (I, 341).

Ablative of Accordance

93. RULE. The ablative without a preposition is used to express that in accordance with which a thing is done; as, mōribus suis, in accordance with their customs (I, 68).

Ablative of Description

94. RULE. The ablative with a modifier may be used to describe a person or thing; as, hominēs inimicō animō, men of unfriendly disposition (I, 126).

1. This construction may be used predicatively; as, nōndum bonō animō vidēbantur, they did not yet seem of friendly disposition (I, 105).

Compare the Descriptive Genitive, § 57.

Ablative of Specification

95. RULE. The ablative without a preposition may be used to denote that in respect to which a statement is true; as, linguā differunt, they differ in language (I, 3).

Ablative Absolute

96. RULE. A noun and a participle may be used in the ablative independently as a substitute for a clause; as, rēgnō occupātō, after the royal power had been seized (I, 65).

1. Instead of a participle, a second noun or an adjective may be used. Here the lacking present participle of sum is to be supplied and the second noun or the adjective is in a predicate relation; as, Messālā et Pisōne cōsulibus, when Messala and Piso were consuls (I, 26).

Ablative of Time When or Within Which

97. RULE. The ablative without a preposition is used to express time when or within which; as, eō tempore, at that time (I, 57); patrum nostrōrum memoriā, within the memory of our fathers (I, 211).

1. The ablative is used rarely to denote duration of time; as, eā tōtā nocte continenter iērunt, they advanced continuously during that entire night (I, 493).

Ablative of Place in Which

98. RULE. Place in which is expressed by the ablative with in or sub; as, in eōrum finibus bellum gerunt, they carry on war in their territory (I, 14).

1. But names of towns and the word domus omit the preposition and use the locative if there is one; as, domī, at home (I, 331).

2. No preposition is used with ablatives of locus and pars, when modified by an adjective; or with any noun when modified by tōtus; as, Rhodanus nōnnūllis locis trānsitur, the Rhone is crossed in several places (I, 101); tōtis castris, throughout the entire camp (I, 770).

LOCATIVE

99. The locative case is confined to names of towns and the word domus. In the singular of the first and second declensions, the form is identical with the genitive, elsewhere with the ablative. The locative of domus is domī. Examples: Rōmae, at Rome; Athēnis, at Athens; Corinthī, at Corinth; Delphīs, at Delphi; Carthāgine, at Carthage; Trallibus, at Tralles.

PREPOSITIONS

With the Ablative

100. The following prepositions govern the ablative only; ā, ab, cum, dē, ē, ex, prae, prō, sine.

1. Before a word beginning with h or a vowel, ab and ex are used; elsewhere ā and ē are generally found.

2. Cum is always used as an enclitic with personal and reflexive pronouns and generally with the relative and interrogative.

With the Accusative and Ablative

101. a. The prepositions in and sub govern either the accusative or the ablative. With the accusative they denote place to which, with the ablative place in which.

With the Accusative

b. All other prepositions take the accusative only.

ADJECTIVES

102. An adjective is called predicate when it is connected with its noun by a form of sum or verb of similar meaning; as, Gallia est dīvisa, Gaul is divided (I, 1); an adjective is called attributive when there is no such connecting verb; as, partēs trēs, three parts (I, 1).

Agreement of Adjectives

103. RULE. Adjectives, participles, and adjective pronouns agree with their nouns in gender, number, and case; for examples see above.

1. When an attributive adjective modifies nouns of different gender or number, it generally agrees with the nearest; as, vir et cōsiliī magnī et virtūtis, a man both of great wisdom and of great courage (III, 5, 2).

Adjectives used as Nouns

104. Adjectives are frequently used as nouns. The meaning is shown by the context or by some word easily understood; as, mittunt nōbilissimōs cīvītātis, they send the best known (men) of the state (I, 118); nostrōs lacessere coepērunt, they began to harass our (soldiers) (I, 275).

Adjectives used as Denoting a Part

105. Some adjectives, mostly superlatives, are used to denote a part. Such are: extrēmus, īfimus (īmus), medius, primus, reliquus, summus; as, summus mōns, the highest part of the mountain (I, 405); in colle mediō, halfway up the hill (I, 438).

Meanings of Comparatives and Superlatives

106. Besides the usual English forms,

1. Comparatives may mean too, quite, rather; as, cupidius īsecūtī, having followed too eagerly (I, 270).

2. Superlatives may mean very or, when quam is used, the superlative idea is made as strong as possible; as, flūmine Rhēnō lātissimō, by the very wide river Rhine (I, 32); quam maximum numerum, the greatest number possible (I, 45).

4. Quidam, certain, is the most definite of the indefinites; as, habent quāsdam rēs, they have certain matters (I, 558).

5. Quisquam, any one, and the adjective ūllus, any, occur generally in sentences which are negative or which imply a negative; as, nec quisquam plūs quam ego dolōris capit, nor does any one suffer more pain than I (I, 372).

6. Quisque, each one, is sometimes used idiomatically with a superlative; as, nōbilissimī cuiusque liberī, the children of (each most famous man) all the most famous men (I, 607).

Pronominal Adjectives

113. Alius, another, and alter, the other (of two) are frequently used as correlatives; as, alius aliā causā illātā, one offering one excuse and another another (I, 759); legiōnēs aliae aliā in parte hostibus resistēbant, some legions in one direction, others in another were resisting the enemy (II, 367); alterī . . . alterī, the one body of men . . . the other (I, 478).

VERBS

Agreement of Verb with Subject

114. RULE. A finite verb agrees with its subject in person and number.

1. A verb may agree with the sense of the subject instead of with the form; as, ut (civitās) exirent, that the state (citizens) go forth (I, 28).

2. A compound subject generally takes a plural verb but may take a singular verb if the subjects are considered as one; as, Gallōs ā Belgis Matrona et Sēquana dividit, the Marne and Seine (making one boundary) separates the Gauls from the Belgians (I, 4); or the verb may agree with the nearer; as, fīlia atque ūnus ē filiis captus est, his daughter and one of his sons was captured (I, 492).

3. In the compound tenses of a verb, the participle agrees with the subject in gender, number, and case; as, pater eius amicus appellātus erat, his father had been called friend (I, 53).

a. A clause or phrase is neuter; as, eam partem Gallōs obtinēre dictum est, (that the Gauls occupy this part has been said) it has been said that the Gauls occupy this part (I, 15).

Verbs used Impersonally

115. Verbs may be used impersonally with or without a clause or phrase as subject; as, pugnātum est, they fought (I, 476); see also § 64, a.

TENSES OF THE INDICATIVE

Present Tense

116. The present tense is used

1. Of a general truth; as, omnēs hominēs libertātī student, all men are anxious for liberty (III, 10, 3);

2. Of an action still going on in the present; as, dīvidit, he divides (simple present), he is dividing (progressive present), he does divide (emphatic present).

a. The historical present is much used in Latin to enliven the narrative, and may be translated as a past; as, in eō itinere persuādet Casticō, on this trip he persuaded Casticus (I, 52).

Imperfect Tense

117. The imperfect tense may denote an action

1. As habitual in the past; as, pugnābant, they used to fight, or they would fight;

2. As done or going on in the past; as, pugnābant, they fought (simple past), they were fighting (progressive past), they did fight (emphatic past).

Future Tense

118. The future tense corresponds to the English future but the active periphrastic (§ 166, 2, a) is often used to describe an action that is future to some form of sum; as, quod portātūrī erant, what they were going to carry (I, 85).

Perfect Tense

119. The perfect tense has two uses: —

1. Equivalent to the English past; as, nōbiliſſimus fuit Orgetorix, Orgetorix was the best known (I, 25);

2. Equivalent to the English present perfect; as, suprā dēmōnstrāvimus, we have shown above (II, 1).

a. A few verbs have perfects that are generally translated as presents; as, nōvī, cōgnōvī (literally, I have found out), I know; and cōnsuēvī (literally, I have become accustomed), I am accustomed. These verbs have corresponding changes in the pluperfect and future perfect.

b. The perfect, pluperfect, and future perfect of meminī, I remember, and ōdī, I hate, have the meanings of the present, imperfect, and future, respectively.

Pluperfect and Future Perfect Tenses

120. The pluperfect and the future perfect tenses correspond to the past perfect and the future perfect of English.

TENSES OF THE SUBJUNCTIVE

121. The present and imperfect subjunctive represent incomplete action, and the perfect and pluperfect represent complete action.

1. In independent clauses, subjunctive tenses have special uses.

2. Tenses of the subjunctive in subordinate clauses represent time which is not absolute but which is relative to the tense of the main verb. For the purposes of this relation, indicative and subjunctive tenses are divided into two classes, as follows:—

a. Primary Tenses: Indicative, present, future, perfect (English present perfect), future perfect; Subjunctive, present, perfect.

b. Secondary Tenses: Indicative, imperfect, perfect (English past), pluperfect; Subjunctive, imperfect, pluperfect.

Sequence of Tenses

122. RULE. In dependent subjunctive clauses, primaries follow primaries and secondaries follow secondaries; as,—

Primaries:

1. rogō	}	{	quid faciās.*
2. rogābō
3. rogāvī
4. rogāverō
			quid fēceris.

2. I shall ask
3. I have asked
4. I shall have asked
			what you did or have done.

Secondaries :

5. rogābam	}	{ quid facerēs.*
6. rogāvī
7. rogāveram

quid fēcisses.

5. I asked or was asking	}	{ what you were doing or would do.
6. I asked
7. I had asked

what you had done.

Exceptions :

a. The historical present may be considered either primary or secondary.

b. The perfect subjunctive is sometimes considered secondary. This is especially true in result clauses.

c. For clearness or vividness, Latin often changes the sequence.

MOODS IN DEPENDENT CLAUSES

Purpose

123. RULE. Purpose may be expressed by the subjunctive introduced by ut, nē, quō, or a relative.

1. Ut (utī) is commonly the introductory word for affirmative purpose ; as, sēmentēs fēcērunt ut cōpia frūmentī suppeteret, they sown so that there might be on hand a supply of food (I, 46).

2. Nē is the regular introductory word for negative purpose ; as, omnem aciem suam circumdederunt, nē qua spēs in fugā relinqueretur, they surrounded their entire line so that there might not be left any hope in flight (I, 1063).

3. Quō is used as the introductory word if there is a comparative purpose clause ; as, castella commūnit quō facilius prohibere posset, he built redoubts that he might be able the more easily to keep (the) back (I, 137).

4. A relative pronoun is used as the introductory word if there is a convenient antecedent in the main clause ; as, diem dicunt, quā (ut eā diē) omnēs conveniant, they name a day on which (day) all to assemble (I, 108).

* Futurity in the subjunctive is often expressed by the active periphrastic conjugation (see § 43, 1). Thus quid factūrus sīs may be used above to express what you will do and quid factūrus essec to express what you would do.

Result

124. RULE. Result is expressed by the subjunctive introduced by ut or ut nōn; as, mōns impendēbat, ut perpaucī prohibēre possent, a mountain overhung so that very few were able to keep (them) back (I, 97).

Characteristic

125. RULE. A relative subjunctive clause may be used to characterize an antecedent which is otherwise undefined.

a. Such clauses are common after expressions that denote existence or non-existence; as, erant duo itinera quibus itineribus exīre possent, there were two roads by which (roads) they could go forth (I, 94).

TEMPORAL CLAUSES

Temporal Clauses with postquam, etc.

126. RULE. Temporal clauses with postquam, ut, ubi, simul ac, cum primum are used with the indicative, generally the perfect; as, postquam id animadvertit, cōpiās suās Caesar subdūxit, after he had noticed this, Caesar led up his troops (I, 436).

Temporal Clauses with dum, donec, and quoad

127. a. RULE. Temporal clauses introduced by dum (at a certain point of time, while) take the present indicative; as, dum ea conquīruntur, ēgressi sunt, while these were being sought for, they started out (I, 508).

b. RULE. Temporal clauses introduced by dum, donec, or quoad (as long as) take the indicative of any tense; as, quoad potuit, restitit, he resisted as long as he could (IV, 12, 5).

c. RULE. Temporal clauses introduced by dum, donec, or quoad (until) take the indicative when the subordinate verb denotes an act that is unforeseen; otherwise the subjunctive is used; as, expectāvit dum militēs convēnerunt, he waited until the soldiers collected; ut spatium intercēdere posset dum militēs convenirent, that a space of time might intervene until the soldiers should collect (I, 128).

Temporal Clauses with priusquam and antequam

128. RULE. Temporal clauses with priusquam or antequam take the indicative when the subordinate verb denotes an act that is unforeseen; otherwise the subjunctive is used; as, nec prius fugere dēstiterunt quam ad flūmen Rhēnum pervēnērunt, and they did not cease to flee before they came to the river Rhine (I, 1087); priusquam quicquam cōnārētur, Diviciācum vocārī iubet, before he should try (to do) anything, he ordered Diviciacus to be summoned (I, 361).

Temporal Clauses with cum

129. RULE. Temporal clauses introduced by cum take the indicative if simply the time or the date of the action is denoted and take the subjunctive if the circumstances are denoted.

a. The subjunctive is generally used with the imperfect and pluperfect tenses and the indicative with the other tenses; as, contendunt cum suis finibus eōs prohibent, they fight when they keep them out of their territory (I, 13); cum civitās iūs suum exsequi cōnārētur, Orgetorix mortuus est, when the state was trying to assert its rights, Orgetorix died (I, 75).

CAUSAL CLAUSES

Causal Clauses with quod

130. RULE. Causal clauses introduced by quod take the indicative unless the reason is quoted; as, fortissimi sunt Belgae propterea quod longissimē absunt, the bravest are the Belgians because they are the farthest away (I, 6); inducti sunt quod suam fugam occultārī posse existimārent, they were influenced because (according to some) they thought their flight could be hidden (I, 511).

Causal Clauses with quia or quoniam

131. RULE. Causal clauses with quia or quoniam take the indicative; as, quoniam ad hunc locum perventum est, nōn aliēnum esse dētur, since we have arrived at this point, it seems not out of place (I, 11, 1).

Causal Clauses with cum

132. RULE. Causal clauses introduced by cum take the subjunctive; as, his cum persuādere nōn possent, lēgātōs mittunt, since they could not persuade them, they sent ambassadors (I, 149).

Causal Clauses with quī

133. RULE. Causal clauses introduced by forms of quī take the subjunctive ; as, dētēstātus est Ambiorīgem quī eius cōsiliī auctor fuisset, he cursed Ambiorix who (because he) had been the author of this scheme (VI, 31, 5).

CONCESSIVE CLAUSES

Concessive Clauses with quamquam, etsi, tametsi

134. RULE. Concessive clauses introduced by quamquam and (in Caesar) by etsi, tametsi take the indicative; as, etsi sine ullō periculō proelium fore vidēbat, tamen nōn putābat, although he realized that a battle would be unattended by any danger, yet he did not think (I, 974).

Concessive Clauses with cum or quī

135. RULE. Concessive clauses introduced by cum or by forms of quī take the subjunctive ; as, cum ad vesperum pugnātum sit, āversum hostem vidēre nēmō potuit, although the battle waged till evening, nobody could see one of the enemy retreating (I, 482).

CONDITIONAL CLAUSES

136. Conditional clauses may be divided into three classes as regards tense, i.e. present, past, future; two classes as regards mood, i.e. indicative and subjunctive.

Indicative Conditions

137. 1. Present: si pugnat, superat if he fights, he conquers.
 2. Past: si pugnābat, superābat } if he fought, he conquered.
 si pugnāvit, superāvit }
 3. Future: si pugnābit, } superābit { if he will fight (fights) si pugnāverit, } if he will have fought (fights.) } he will conquer.

Note that: a. Nothing is implied as to the truth or the falsity of the above. These are sometimes called simple conditions;

b. In 3 above the English present is used where the Latin requires the future or the future perfect. This is sometimes called a future more vivid condition.

138. RULE. Indicative conditions use tenses according to sense.

Subjunctive Conditions

139. 1. Present: si pugnāret, superāret, if he were fighting, he would be conquering.

2. Past: si pugnāvisset, superāvisset, if he had fought, he would have conquered.

3. Future: si pugnet, superet, if he should fight, he would conquer.

Note that: a. In 1 and 2 above the conditions and conclusions are contrary to fact and that the imperfect denotes present time and the pluperfect denotes past time;

b. In 3, the condition and conclusion are doubtfully stated and that the present tense denotes future time. This is sometimes called a future less vivid condition.

140. a. RULE. Contrary to fact conditions use the imperfect subjunctive in both clauses to denote present time and the pluperfect subjunctive to denote past time;

1. With verbs or expressions meaning could or ought, a past tense of the indicative may be used in the conclusion.

b. RULE. Subjunctive conditions use the present tense in both clauses to denote future time.

Mixed Conditions

141. In Latin, as in English, the condition may be of one form and the conclusion of another; as, sī hoc fēcit, bene est, if he has done this, it is well.

Conditional Clauses of Comparison

142. RULE. Conditional clauses of comparison introduced by ac sī, ut sī, quasi, quam sī, tamquam sī, velut sī, take the subjunctive, applying the rule for sequence; as, absentis Ariovistī crūdēlitātem, velut sī cōram adsit, horrent, they shudder at the cruelty of Ariovistus absent, as if he were present in person (I, 634).

RELATIVE CLAUSES

143. RULE. Relative clauses regularly have their verbs in the indicative, but they may become subjunctive if they in turn depend on another subjunctive ; as, utī ea, quae apud eōs gerantur, cōgnōscant, that they should find out the things that were being done among them (II, 22).

a. But for subjunctive relative clauses see : § 123, 4, purpose ; § 125, characteristic ; § 133, causal ; § 135, concessive.

SUBSTANTIVE CLAUSES

144. Substantive clauses are those which are used like nouns, as the subjects or objects of verbs, as appositives, etc.

Substantive Clauses of Purpose

145. RULE. Verbs that mean ask, command, decide, demand, permit, persuade, urge, take object clauses with ut or nē and the subjunctive ; as, cīvitātī persuāsīt ut exīrent, he persuaded the state (citizens) to go forth (I, 28).

a. But iubeō, order, cupiō, desire, vetō, forbid, take the infinitive with subject accusative.

Substantive Clauses with Verbs of Fearing

146. RULE. Verbs of fearing take object clauses with nē (affirmative) or ut (negative) and the subjunctive ; as, nē eius suppliciō Dīviciācī animum offenderet, verēbātur, he feared lest by punishing him he would hurt the feelings of Diviciacus (I, 359) ; rem frūmentāriam, ut supportārī posset, sē timēre dicēbant, they said they were afraid that the grain could not be brought up (I, 781).

Substantive Clauses with Verbs of Hindering, etc.

147. RULE. Verbs of hindering, preventing, refusing, take object clauses with nē, quōminus or quīn (after negatives) and the subjunctive ; as, nē causam dīceret, sē ēripuit, he saved himself from pleading his case (I, 75).

a. But prohibeō takes the infinitive.

Substantive Clauses of Result

148. RULE. Substantive clauses of result may be used as object clauses with verbs of accomplishing, as subjects of certain impersonal verbs, or as appositives of nouns or pronouns; they take ut or ut nōn and the subjunctive; as, quae rēs commeātūs ut ad eum supportārī possent efficiēbat, and this maneuver brought it to pass that supplies could be brought to him (II, 91); his rēbus fiēbat ut minus lātē vagārentur, because of these things it happened that they wandered less widely (I, 36); iūs est bellī ut quī vīcērunt iīs quōs vīcērunt imperent, it is the law of war that those who have conquered control those whom they have conquered (I, 695).

Substantive Clauses with Verbs of Doubting

149. RULE. Substantive clauses with quīn are used with negative expressions of doubt or uncertainty; as, nōn est dubium quīn Helvētīī plūrimū possint, there is no doubt that the Helvetians are the most powerful (I, 62).

a. When dubitō means hesitate it takes a complementary infinitive.

Substantive Clauses with quod

150. RULE. Substantive clauses with quod take the indicative.

a. Quod here may be translated that, the fact that, as to the fact, so far as; as, quod multītūdinem Germānōrum in Galliam trādūcō, id meī mūniendī causā faciō, as to the fact that I am bringing a vast number of Germans over into Gaul, I am doing this for the purpose of strengthening myself (I, 928).

Indirect Questions

151. RULE. Substantive clauses introduced by a question word (sometimes by sī, whether) are indirect questions and take a subjunctive verb; as, in utram partem (flūmen) fluat, iūdicārī nōn potest, it cannot be decided in which direction (the river) flows (I, 200); sī perrumpere possent cōnātī, after trying (to see) whether they could break through (I, 145).

1. Double indirect questions are introduced by utrum or -ne in the first part and by an in the second. Necne means or not.

INDIRECT DISCOURSE

152. Direct discourse quotes the exact words spoken or thought.

In English, indirect discourse changes the original words to conform to the verb upon which it depends; as, (Direct) He said, "I am going"; (Indirect) He said that he was going.

Moods in Indirect Discourse

In Latin, the changes in moods are made according to the following rules: —

153. RULE. All declarative main verbs become infinitives with subjects accusative in indirect discourse; as, (Direct) Allobrogibus persuādēbimus, we shall persuade the Allobroges; (Indirect) Allobrogibus sēsē persuāsūrōs (esse) existimābant, they thought they would persuade the Allobroges (I, 104).

154. RULE. All imperative main verbs become subjunctive in indirect discourse. The negative is nē; as, (Direct) nōlī committere, don't allow; (Indirect) (dixit) nē committeret, (he said) he should not allow (I, 238).

155. RULE. All real interrogative main verbs become subjunctive in indirect discourse; as, (Direct) quid verēminī? why are you afraid? (Indirect) (quaesivit) quid verērentur, (he asked) why they were afraid (I, 796).

1. A statement put into question form for emphasis is called a rhetorical question and employs an infinitive (see § 153); as, (Direct) num memoriam dēpōnere possum, I cannot forget, can I? (Indirect) (quaesivit) num (sē) memoriam dēpōnere posse? (he asked) could he forget? (I, 251).

156. RULE. All subordinate clauses in indirect discourse have their verbs in the subjunctive; as, (Direct) sī pācem populus Rōmānus cum Helvētiīs faciet, in eam partem ibunt Helvētiī, if the Roman people make peace with the Helvetians, the Helvetians will go into that section; (Indirect) (dixit) sī . . . faceret, Helvētiōs . . . itūrōs esse, (he said) if the Roman people made, etc., the Helvetians would go, etc. (I, 227).

1. Subordinate clauses which are not considered as a part of the quotation are in the indicative; as, id, quod ipsī diēbus XX aegerrimē cōnfēcērant, illum ūnō diē fēcisse intellēxērunt, they realized that he, in one day, had done that which they had done with the greatest difficulty in twenty days (I, 223).

Tenses of the Infinitive in Indirect Discourse

157. RULE. The time indicated by the infinitive is present, past, or future relatively to the verb on which it depends ; as, (Direct) angustōs finēs habēmus, we have narrow limits ; (Indirect) angustōs sē finēs habēre arbitrābantur, they thought they had narrow limits (I, 40).

1. Verbs of hoping and promising take a future indirect discourse infinitive. Posse often has a future meaning ; as, tōtius Galliae sēsē potiri posse spērant, they hope they will be able to get control of all Gaul (I, 66).

2. Contrary to fact conditions in indirect discourse form the conclusion in the active by the use of a future participle with fuisse, and in the passive by using futūrum fuisse with ut and the imperfect subjunctive ; as, respondit sī quid ipsī ā Caesare opus esset, sēsē ad eum ventūrum fuisse, he replied that if he himself needed anything from Caesar, he would have come to him (I, 666) ; dixit, sī Caesar vēnisset, futūrum fuisse ut vinceretur, he said that if Caesar had come, (it would have happened that he would be conquered) he would have been conquered.

3. Verbs or expressions that mean ability or obligation may have a perfect infinitive in the conclusion ; as, respondit nōn fuisse difficile, he replied that it would not have been difficult (I, 245).

Tenses of the Subjunctive in Indirect Discourse

158. The regular rule of sequence applies to the use of tenses in the subjunctives of indirect discourse, but the subordinate verb is secondary if either the main verb of saying or thinking or the infinitive is a past tense. However, a primary tense may be used after a secondary for the sake of vividness ; as, respondit, cum ea ita sint, sēsē pācem esse factūrum, he replied that, although these things were so, he would make peace (I, 257).

1. The rule for sequence of tenses does not hold in the conditional part of contrary to fact conditions in indirect discourse. The imperfect or pluperfect does not become primary even though it depends on a primary ; as, dicit (or dixit), sī Caesar vēnisset, sē eum visūrum fuisse, he says (or said) that, if Caesar had come, he would have seen him.

Subjunctive in Implied Indirect Discourse

159. RULE. The subjunctive may be used in any subordinate clause to suggest that it is a quotation; as, Caesar frūmentum quod essent polliciti flāgitāre, Caesar kept demanding the grain which (as he claimed) they had promised (I, 282).

Subjunctive by Attraction

160. RULE. A verb subordinate to a subjunctive clause (or infinitive) and forming an essential part of that clause is often attracted from the indicative to the subjunctive; as, utī commeātū quī supportārētur Caesarem interclūderet, that he might cut Caesar off from the supplies which were being brought up (I, 1007).

Imperative Mood

161. Commands in the second person are expressed by the imperative; as, dēsilīte, jump down (IV, 25, 3).

a. A negative command (prohibition) is expressed most commonly by the use of nōlī (plu. nōlīte) with the present infinitive; as, nōlī nōs dēspicere, don't despise us.

Infinitive

162. The infinitive with or without a subject accusative may be used as the subject or the object of a verb.

The Infinitive without a Subject Accusative

163. 1. As Subject of a Verb.

The infinitive without a subject accusative may be used as subject of forms of sum and of impersonal verbs; as, perfacile est imperiō potiri, it is very easy to get control (I, 29); ut id sibi facere liceat, that it may be allowed (to) them to do this (I, 122).

2. As Object of a Verb (Complementary Infinitive).

The infinitive without a subject accusative may be used as the object of a verb to complete the meaning of that verb. Such verbs are: audeō, coepī, cōnor, cōstituō, cōnsuēscō, cupiō, dēbeō, dēsistō, dubitō, incipiō and volō, nōlō, mālō; as, cōstituērunt ea comparāre, they decided to prepare the things (I, 44).

a. The complementary infinitive is common with possum.

The Infinitive with Subject Accusative

164. 1. As Subject of a Verb.

The infinitive with subject accusative may be used as the subject of forms of sum and of impersonal verbs; as, poenam sequi oportēbat, (punishment to follow was right) punishment must follow (I, 70).

2. As Object of a Verb.

a. The infinitive with subject accusative may be used as the object of verbs meaning allow, command, forbid, etc. Such verbs are: cōgō, iubeō, patior, vetō; as, Orgetorigem causam dicere coēgērunt, they compelled Orgetorix to plead his case (I, 69).

b. This construction is used most commonly with verbs of saying, thinking, knowing, etc., and as such is known as indirect discourse. See §§ 152 ff.

The Infinitive with Subject Nominative (Historical Infinitive)

165. The infinitive when used as a substitute for the imperfect indicative in a main clause takes a subject nominative; as, cotīdiē Caesar frūmentum flāgitāre, Caesar kept demanding the grain every day (I, 282).

Participles

166. RULE. The time indicated by the participle is present, past or future relatively to the verb on which it depends and, according to the context, may denote cause, manner, concession, time, or circumstance, like a clause; as, haec flēns petiit, he asked these things (while he was) weeping (I, 382); is rēgnī cupiditāte inductus coniūrātiōnem fēcit, (because he had been) influenced by a desire for royal power, he formed a conspiracy (I, 26).

1. The present participle is not common in Latin. A clause with dum or cum is generally used instead; as, dum morātur, subitō timor exercitum occupāvit, while he was delaying, suddenly fear seized the army (I, 748, 754).

2. a. The future active participle is used with forms of sum to describe an action that is future to that form; as, quod portātūrī erant, what they were going to carry (I, 85). This combined form is known as the First Periphrastic Conjugation.

b. The future passive participle is used

(1) With cūrō and a few other verbs to denote purpose; as, pontem faciendum cūrat, he had a bridge built (I, 221);

(2) As a predicate adjective; as, nōn ferendus, unendurable (I, 661);

(3) With forms of sum, and then denotes obligation or necessity; as, Caesar concēdendum (esse) nōn putābat, Caesar thought that permission ought not to be granted (I, 123). This combined form is known as the Second Periphrastic Conjugation;

(4) For gerundive constructions, see § 168 and § 169.

3. The perfect participle agreeing with a direct object of habeō emphasizes the lasting effect of the action of the participle; as, portōria redēpta habet, he kept the import duties (which had been) bought up (I, 325).

a. The perfect participle of a deponent verb sometimes has a passive meaning; as, dēpopulātis agris, now that their fields had been laid waste (I, 190).

Gerund

167. The gerund is an active verbal noun and corresponds to the English verbal noun in -ing; as, bellandī cupidus, fond of warring (I, 38). It is never found in the nominative, and in the accusative only after prepositions.

Gerundive

168. The gerundive is a passive verbal adjective, and is, almost without exception, used where English would employ a verbal noun with a direct object. In Latin the noun is placed in the case the gerund would have had and the gerundive is made to agree; as, ad animōs effēminandōs, to weaken the character (I, 9), instead of ad animōs effēminandum; cupiditās bellī gerendī, fondness for waging war (I, 841), instead of cupiditās bellum gerendī; dē expugnandō oppidō spem, hope of taking the town (II, 170), instead of dē expugnandō oppidum spem.

1. With meī, tui, sui, nostrī, vestrī, the gerundive with a like ending is used without regard to gender or number; as, nōn sui colligendī hostibus facultātem relinquunt, they do not leave the enemy a chance for collecting themselves (III, 6, 1).

Uses of Gerund and Gerundive

169. 1. The genitive is used

a. With nouns and adjectives; as, bellandī cupidus, fond of warring (I, 38); facultās itineris faciundī, the chance of making the march (I, 126).

b. With causā and grātiā to denote purpose; as, sui mūniendī causā, for the sake of strengthening himself (I, 929); speculandi causā, for the sake of spying (I, 1002).

2. The dative is seldom used.

3. The accusative is used with ad to express purpose; as, diem ad dēlīberandum sūmam, I shall take time for deliberating (I, 130); ad eās rēs cōficiendās Orgetorix dēligitur, Orgetorix was chosen to complete these matters (I, 50).

4. The ablative is used with prepositions and to denote means or cause; as, in quaerendō reperiēbat, upon inquiring, he found out (I, 343); lapidibus subministrandīs, by furnishing stones (III, 25, 1).

Supine

170. a. The accusative supine is used with verbs that express or imply motion to denote purpose; as, lēgātōs mittunt rogātum auxilium, they send ambassadors to ask for aid (I, 184).

b. The ablative supine is used with adjectives to denote specification; as, perfacile factū est, it is very easy to do (I, 60).

Grammatical and Rhetorical Figures

171. 1. Hendiadys consists of the use of two nouns with a conjunction instead of a single modified noun; as, omnia exempla cruciātūsque ēdit, he displays all sorts of cruelties (I, 608).

2. Asyndeton consists of the omission of coördinate conjunctions; as, L. Pīsōne, A. Gabiniō cōsulibus, when Lucius Piso and Aulus Gabinius were consuls (I, 110).

3. Litotes consists of the use of two negatives to make an emphatic affirmative; as, nōn irrīdiculē, with much wit (I, 877).

METHOD OF EXPRESSING DATES

172. a. The Romans designated the year by the names of the consuls for that year; as, Messālā et Pīsōne cōsulibus, in the year when Messala and Piso were consuls (i.e. 61 B.C.) (I, 26).

b. Months were designated by the use of adjectives, as follows: Iānuārius, Februārius, Mārtius, Aprīlis, Māius, Iūnius, Quīntīlis (Iūlius), Sextīlis (Augustus), September, Octōber, November, December.

c. Days of the month were reckoned backward from three points in the month, as follows: —

1. Kalendae, which fell upon the first of the month;

2. Nōnae, which fell upon the fifth (except in March, May, July, and October, when they fell on the seventh) ;

3. Īdūs, which fell on the thirteenth (except in March, May, July, and October, when they fell on the fifteenth).

173. In reckoning days of the month, the Romans counted both ends of the series ; for instance, they would have said that Wednesday was the fourth day before Saturday and the third of January was known as the third day before the Nones (which fell on the fifth). Hence the following : —

Kalendis Iānuāriis or Kal. Iān. = on Jan. 1.

diē quārtō ante Nōnās Iānuāriās, or, more commonly, ante diem quārtum Nōnās Iānuāriās, which was generally written in abbreviated form ; as, a. d. IV. Nōn. Iān. = on Jan. 2.

prīdiē Nōnās Iānuāriās or prīdiē Nōn. Iān. = on Jan. 4.

diē tertiō ante Kalendās Februāriās or a. d. III. Kal. Feb. = on Jan. 30.

prīdiē Kalendās Februāriās or prīdiē Kal. Feb. = on Jan. 31.

174. Formulae for translating Roman dates into English : —

1. Falling after the Ides. For example : —

a. d. IV. Kal. Feb. The English date = 31 (days in Jan.) + 1 (for the Feb. Calends) + 1 (for counting both ends) — 4 (the given number) = Jan. 29.

In general add two to the number of days in the earlier month and subtract the given number.

2. Falling after the Calends or Nones. For example : —

a. d. VII. Id. Apr. The English date = 13 (Ides of Apr.) + 1 (for counting both ends) — 7 (the given number) = Apr. 7.

In general add one to the date on which the Nones or Ides fall and subtract the given number.

ROMAN NAMES

175. A Roman generally had three names : — praenōmen, first or given name ;

nōmen, name of the gens to which he belonged ;

cōgnōmen, name of the family to which he belonged.

Thus the name Gāius Iūlius Caesar denotes Gaius of the Julian gens or house and of the family of Caesar.

a. A foreigner on becoming a Roman citizen took the praenōmen and nōmen of his Roman patron and added his own name as a cōgnōmen ; as, C. Valerius Cabūrus (I, 992).

LATIN PROSE COMPOSITION

The references are to sections in the Grammatical Summary. Words to be omitted in Latin are in parentheses, words which are explanatory are in brackets.

The editors recommend that the Exercises in Latin Prose Composition be used largely as oral rather than as written lessons. The sentences are purposely made short and are intended simply as a basis of drill in forms and syntax. Oral drill brings about this result much more effectively than written work. It is suggested that the sentences be read by the instructor and the Latin given by the pupil with book closed. To promote independence and facility, slight changes may be made in tenses of verbs, number of nouns, etc.

LESSON I

Predicate Noun and Appositive: 49.

Agreement of Verb: 114 with 1 and 2.

Tenses of Incomplete Action: 116, 117, 118.

Exercise

1. This province is a part of Gaul. 2. Gaul has not many rivers. 3. One river is the Seine; another, the Marne. 4. The Seine is a river of Gaul. 5. Two rivers, the Rhone and the Rhine, separate one side [pars]. 6. These were long and deep rivers. 7. The Belgians inhabit this part of Gaul. 8. The Gauls, a tribe of Gaul, keep out the Helvetians. 9. The Helvetians were a brave tribe. 10. The Gauls and Helvetians were brave tribes. 11. The languages and customs differed. 12. The territory of the Helvetians, a brave tribe, had many mountains. 13. Orgetorix was a chieftain of the Helvetians. 14. The Helvetians will start out and will wage many wars. 15. The citizens of this territory will go forth.

16. A large number of men will seize a part of Gaul, a fertile land. 17. Wars will be often waged. 18. (There) will be many battles. 19. Many nobles will be taken (as) hostages. 20. Orgetorix and the Helvetians will occupy this territory.

LESSON II

Predicate and Attributive Adjectives: 102, 103.

Agreement of Adjectives: 103, 114, 3 and a.

General Rule for the Genitive: 51.

Tenses of Complete Action: 119, 120.

Exercise

1. The influence of Orgetorix was great. 2. The people prepared many carts and troops. 3. Peace and friendship had already been established. 4. (It) had been decided to undertake the journey. 5. The roads were not easy. 6. (There) were wide lakes and rivers. 7. To prepare all the grain and carts was not easy. 8. But the neighboring nations and tribes were friendly. 9. Casticus, a Sequanian, and (his) father had been called friends of the Roman people. 10. And the Roman senate and people had called the Aeduans friends. 11. Dumnorix, the Aeduan, was the brother of Diviciacus. 12. Both Casticus and Diviciacus have been chosen leaders of armies. 13. (It) had been decided to accept both Aeduan and Sequanian troops. 14. Orgetorix and (his) friends will be made leaders of these troops. 15. The Helvetians found out Orgetorix's plan. 16. This plan was decided (upon). 17. All the clients and friends of Orgetorix were brought together. 18. (It) was easy to save him. 19. The magistrates collected large armies and troops. 20. All these things are known.

LESSON III

Agreement of the Relative Pronoun: 111.

Demonstrative Pronouns: 110.

Indirect Object: 63.

Exercise

1. The speech which Orgetorix had delivered influenced the Helvetians. 2. He announced to them that which had been decided (upon). 3. Those to whom arms have been given will go forth. 4. They will leave the villages and buildings which have been set-on-fire. 5. The Boii, who had many towns, and the Rauraci too, will go forth. 6. The former were neighbors; the latter (were) allies. 7. (There) are two rivers which they will cross. 8. One is wide and deep; the other has several fords. 9. The former is called the Rhine; the latter the Rhone. 10. Four hundred towns and villages will be left. 11. The former were large and well-known. 12. Grain was given to all those who will start out. 13. All these (men) to whom grain has been given will start out. 14. They choose Geneva, which is a well-known town of the Helvetians. 15. They had already prepared carts and grain which had been purchased. 16. They will cross the bridges and fords which you have seen. 17. Orgetorix, who has been chosen leader, will win the royal-power. 18. The Helvetians, whose army has been collected, will choose the easier road. 19. These Helvetians, who are a brave tribe, will seize many towns and villages of Gaul. 20. The width of that territory which is called Gaul is great.

LESSON IV

Reflexive Pronoun and Adjective: 108.

Intensive Pronoun: 109.

Possessive Adjectives.

• Possessive Genitive: 52.

Note that

a. The reflexive possessive suus must be used when the English possessives his, her, its, their, refer to the subject of the verb. Remember that suus is an adjective and hence must agree with the noun it modifies and not with the noun to which it refers; as, mātrēm suam vīdit, he saw his mother.

b. The genitive of is is regularly used when the English possessive does not refer to the subject; as, mātrēm eius vīdit, he saw his (i.e., another's) mother.

1. The Helvetians themselves will make a journey through our province. 2. This (fact) was announced to Caesar himself, who had already sent his army. 3. Caesar himself started out. 4. His arrival was announced to all the Helvetians' chieftains. 5. The Boii had been made allies of the Helvetians. 6. The Helvetians sent their best-known (men) (as) ambassadors. 7. We shall make our journey through your province without injury. 8. (There) is no other road left. 9. Caesar sent away the ambassadors who had said these (things) to him. 10. Meanwhile his soldiers constructed a long wall and ditch. 11. They also built redoubts which kept out the Helvetians' troops. 12. Dumnorix had great influence among the Sequanians and he was a friend of the Helvetians. 13. Orgetorix, the Helvetian, had given him his daughter. 14. (It) was decided to go through the Sequanians' territory. 15. Caesar replied to the ambassador who had reported this plan to him. 16. You will try the road through the Sequanians. 17. But I shall keep your troops away. 18. The Aeduians themselves have asked (for) aid which I shall give to them. 19. My army will defeat your army. 20. The Helvetians' ambassador announced Caesar's reply to his (friends).

LESSON V

Extent of Time and Space: 74.

Time When and Within Which: 97.

Exercise

1. Within two days, three cantons of the Helvetians crossed the river. 2. At that time, the other men were left behind. 3. Caesar pursued these for many miles and killed them. 4. These men, within the memory of our fathers, had killed Cassius the consul. 5. The Helvetians at this time sent another embassy, of which Divico was chief. 6. For several years Divico had been a leader of the Helvetians. 7. You have done in one day that which we have completed in twenty days. 8. The Romans themselves have not defeated our brave troops. 9. Within a short time, we shall defeat the Romans. 10. To Divico Caesar pointed out the many wrongs of the Helvetians. 11. For many months you harassed the Aeduians, our friends. 12. And within a few days you have attempted a journey through our province. 13. Caesar demanded (as) hostages many sons and daughters of the leaders. 14. But the Helvetians did not give the hostages that Caesar demanded. 15. Both the Romans and the Helvetians moved camp on the next day. 16. Scouts were sent ahead in the third watch. 17. The Romans pursued the enemy for ten miles and sustained a great loss. 18. Then both armies marched fifteen days. 19. Neither Caesar nor the Helvetians' chieftain was conquered.

20. Within a brief space of time, they will fight again.

LESSON VI

Place to Which: 75.

Place from Which: 78.

Place in Which: 98, 99.

Exercise

1. The Aeduans did not give Caesar the grain which they had promised. 2. The grain was not yet ripe in the fields. 3. The boats, in which was Caesar's supply, were on the River Saône. 4. The Helvetians had turned away from the river. 5. Caesar did not depart from them. 6. The Aeduans had not helped Caesar at this critical time. 7. Liscus, who had been summoned to Caesar, replied. 8. In our territory, (there) are some powerful leaders. 9. They will not bring the grain to the Romans. 10. These things were said to Caesar in his camp. 11. Dumnorix, who at this time was at Geneva, had been powerful for many years. 12. He was the brother of Diviciacus, whom Caesar summoned from home. 13. Caesar pointed out those (things) which had been said in the council of the Gauls. 14. You have not brought the grain from Geneva nor from the other parts of the territory. 15. My soldiers will go to the Aeduans and to-the- vicinity-of Geneva. 16. In those places they will see a great supply of grain. 17. Other soldiers will be sent to my army from-near Rome. 18. For I have many friends at home who will come to Gaul. 19. The (men) who are now here, I shall send home. 20. Your brother has returned to Geneva, but I shall not punish him.

LESSON VII

Direct Questions.

Indirect Questions: 151.

Sequence of Tenses: 121, 122.

DIRECT AND INDIRECT QUESTIONS

Questions are divided into

A. Direct.

B. Indirect.

A. Direct questions may be subdivided into

(1) Those answerable by yes or no.

(2) Those not answerable by yes or no.

1. Those answerable by yes or no use

a. The enclitic -ne attached to the emphatic word (placed first) when the answer is not hinted in the question; as, venietne Caesar? will Caesar come?

b. The introductory word nōnne when the answer yes is hinted; as, nōnne Caesar veniet? will not Caesar come?

c. The introductory word num when the answer no is hinted; as, num Caesar veniet? Caesar will not come, will he?

2. Those not answerable by yes or no use an interrogative pronoun, adjective, or adverb; as, quis veniet? who will come? quī homō veniet? what man will come? ubi homō veniet? when will the man come?

B. Indirect questions are direct questions quoted indirectly and used as substantive clauses with a verb that expresses an interrogative idea, and may be subdivided into

(1) Those which, in the direct form, are answerable by yes or no.

These are introduced by num or -ne; as, rogat num veniat, he asks whether he is coming.

(2) Those which, in the direct form, are not answerable by yes or no.

Direct questions introduced by an interrogative pronoun, adjective, or adverb use, upon becoming indirect, the same introductory word; as, rogat quis veniat, he asks who is coming.

Exercise

1. What did Caesar do on the next day? 2. He found out whether he could ascend the mountain. 3. Did he send Considius from the camp to the mountain? 4. Considius did not find the enemy on the mountain, did he? 5. Didn't Considius see the Roman army at daybreak? 6. Caesar asked whom he had seen. 7. Considius did not find out whether the enemy was there. 8. But late in the day Caesar learned who was there. 9. On the next day, he started out for Bibracte. 10. You know, don't you, whether he made forced marches? 11. Did he remain there many days? 12. The Helvetians tried to find out where Caesar would find a supply of grain. 13. He will ask whether the neighbors will give him grain. 14. Will he not leave his baggage in that town? 15. Have the Aeduans always been called friends of Caesar? 16. Don't you know how large a number of soldiers the Aeduans have sent to Caesar? 17. He asked whether they would also fortify his camp. 18. They will find out how powerful Caesar is. 19. Then they will show how they will help him. 20. Will not Caesar draw up a battle line within a few days?

4. Because of the many trees, (it) resulted that all of the legions could not be seen by one man. 5. When the Atrebates had been exhausted by wounds, they were driven into the river. 6. While they were trying to cross the river, our men killed a large number of them. 7. Because our men had advanced into an unfavorable place, the enemy tried again to resist them. 8. But after they had begun again to fight, they were routed. 9. (It) happened also that two other legions had routed the Viromandui. 10. When they had been driven from the higher place, they fought on the very bank of the river. 11. The enemy could not be prevented from stripping [but that they should strip] our ramparts of soldiers. 12. The Nervii advanced to attack the camp. [Translate in three ways.] 13. Since the ramparts had been stripped of soldiers, certain (ones) of the Nervii advanced. 14. They did not doubt that they could gain possession of the camp. 15. Because those who were on the top of the hill saw that our men were victors, they hurried from the camp for the sake of plundering. 16. But when they saw the enemy in our camp, they fled headlong. 17. On account of the noise of those who were coming with the baggage, it resulted that many fled. 18. The Treveri, who were especially skilled in war, fled because they found out that our camp was filled with the enemy. 19. They did not wish to wait until they should be killed. 20. Because the Romans were fleeing in all directions, they thought that we had been conquered.

But although they were exhausted with wounds, they were resisting the enemy. 6. Caesar himself advanced to the front [first] rank because (there) was no aid that could be sent. 7. He thought that the enemies' attack could be stopped, though matters seemed to be at a crisis. 8. Because time was short, he snatched a shield; he himself had come there without a shield. 9. When he had arrived at the front rank, he ordered [imperō] the centurions to fight with open ranks. 10. This was done that they might the more easily use their swords. 11. Though the Romans had been hard pressed, Caesar's arrival gave them hope of victory. 12. No one doubted that they had soldiers enough. 13. But their method of fighting had prevented them from conquering [so that they should not conquer]. 14. The result was that the enemies' attack was stopped. 15. Although the enemy had ceased from the attack on one side, Caesar found out that the seventh legion was being hard pressed. 16. He warned the tribunes that they should gradually bring their forces together. 17. When this is [will have been] done, you will no longer fear that you will be surrounded by the enemy. 18. Al-

SECOND YEAR LATIN.

THE conviction has long been growing that pupils, in their study of Latin, are not gaining all they should in power to translate; that too much effort is expended on syntax and on thumbing the vocabulary. In most schools this intensive work of the second year has been limited to the first four books of Caesar's Gallic War. Students have learned to depend on notes and vocabulary rather than upon themselves. They have done little independent thinking. In this way they have spent much time and yet have made scanty progress in ability to translate, and have lost all opportunity to read the more interesting parts of Books V, VI, and VII of the Gallic War, the very important and highly entertaining narrative of the Civil War, and the attractive Lives of Nepos. To remedy these conditions is the purpose of this book.

Selections have been made from Books III–VII of the Gallic War, from Book III of the Civil War, and from Nepos. All words which Professor Lodge in The Vocabulary of High School Latin has shown should be mastered by the end of the second year are printed in full-faced type in the text where they first occur. These words with their meanings and forms, together with all other first occurrences, are given in the page vocabularies. The meanings—but not the forms—of others are repeated where necessary, so that pupils will carry in mind only that definite and limited list of words which Professor Lodge has shown to be of frequent occurrence and of the greatest value.

The footnotes include the meanings of the less usual words, unusual meanings of common words, hints on derivation and translation, and synonyms. Matters of syntax and history have been reduced to a minimum.

The chapter on word formation has been made short and simple with the thought that much of this work should be postponed till later in the course.

The editor wishes to acknowledge his gratitude to the many teachers of Latin who have given helpful suggestions, and especially to Dr. Ernst Riess, Chairman of the Department of Ancient Languages in the Boys' High School, Brooklyn, who has carefully read the entire manuscript.

SIGHT TRANSLATION

THIS volume contains considerably more Latin than is generally read in the second year. The purpose of the additional matter is that the teacher may be given a comparatively wide range of choice and not that a much greater amount be read. It cannot be too strongly urged that teachers should exercise the utmost care lest sight translation become a matter of quantity rather than of quality, and lest the pupil think that translation is the result of combining memory with guesswork. It must be understood that the purpose of sight translation is the development of power — not the careless reading of much Latin. The difference between sight translation and the prepared translation is one not of quantity but simply of method. In sight translation, only that information is given which is absolutely and wholly new to the pupil. For the rest he must depend upon his own experience and ingenuity.

It is suggested that a large part of this sight work be done in class. The pupil should be urged to follow closely and get whatever he can from the sentence as the Latin is carefully read by the teacher. The reading may be repeated several times and the meaning brought out so far as possible by careful accentuation. The pupil may then be asked to give the meaning of the sentence in a general way. This may be followed by a rereading by phrases in order of occurrence, and the main import of each phrase and its relation to others should be understood before it is left. The meaning of many phrases is so clear that translation will be found unnecessary. Another reading by the teacher will serve to make the various parts of the sentence fall into their proper relations in the student's mind. Following this a pupil may be asked to give in his own words—with the text before him—not a translation but the full and complete meaning of the sentence as it appears to him. By this method, much of the slavish adherence to Latin idioms will be avoided.

The text covered in this way may be the assigned translation for the next recitation when syntax and forms may be considered as fully as desired. It should be remembered, however, that syntactical questions should be asked simply for the purpose of ascertaining the pupil's knowledge of the bearing of the phrase or word on the meaning of the sentence and not for the purpose of attaching labels to ablatives and subjunctives.

RÉSUMÉ OF CHAPTERS 7-16

In northwestern Gaul, a revolt breaks out which is led by the Veneti, a seafaring tribe. To meet them, Caesar orders a fleet built, and places Brutus in command, while other staff officers are sent to engage the attention of certain other revolting tribes. Because of the peculiar situation of their towns, the Veneti for a time prolong the revolt. But when Caesar's new fleet arrives, the enemy is out-manuevered and utterly defeated.

Sabinus goes north against the Venelli, encamps and refuses battle.

17. Dum haec in Venetīs geruntur, Q. Titūrius Sabīnus cum iīs cōpiīs quās ā Caesare accēperat in finēs Venellōrum pervēnit. His praeerat Viridovīx ac sum-

RÉSUMÉ OF CHAPTERS 20-22

Crassus, realizing that he must meet a foe who has in former engagements vanquished Roman armies, takes unusual precautions.
 The Sotiates in Aquitania make an unsuccessful attack on the Romans and later, after entrapping Crassus in an ambush, are again routed and their town is seized. Their chief, Adiatunnus, attempts to escape with his six hundred faithful followers, but fails.

Crassus urges the enemy to fight.

LIBER QUARTUS

RÉSUMÉ OF CHAPTERS 1-19

At this time practically all Gaul is under subjection to Rome. But Caesar realizes that the Germans menace the eastern border. Already two German tribes, the Usipetes and the Tencteri, who have been driven from their homes, have crossed the Rhine into Gaul and conquered the Menapii. Caesar fears an alliance between Gauls and Germans, and determines to make war on the Germans. He tells the Usipetes and the Tencteri that there is no place for them in Gaul, but that they may settle in the territory of the Ubii just east of the Rhine. They delay their reply to this suggestion, and make a treacherous but successful attack on the Romans.

Prominent Germans come to Caesar to apologize for the attack, but are thrown into chains. Caesar makes a sudden attack upon the Germans, and slays nearly all of them. That the Germans east of the Rhine may be duly impressed, Caesar decides to cross the river. He builds a bridge in the extraordinarily short time of ten days, crosses, ravages the neighboring country, recrosses, and destroys the bridge.

Caesar decides upon an expedition to Britain, but can get little information about the country.

20. Exiguā parte aestātis reliquā Caesar, etsī in hīs locis, quod omnis Gallia ad septentriōnēs vergit, mātūrae sunt hiemēs, tamen in Britanniam proficīscī contendit, quod omnibus ferē Gallicis bellis¹ hostibus² nostris inde

RÉSUMÉ OF CHAPTERS 22-31

Caesar prepares a fleet, crosses with part of his army to Britain, and after a sharp encounter with the natives effects a landing. The Britons retreat, but Caesar from lack of cavalry cannot pursue them. A few tribes submit, but Caesar determines to await his cavalry before he advances farther. The transports in which his cavalry sail are driven back by a storm, and the fleet is nearly wrecked. The Britons, seeing their chance, plan to rebel. Caesar, however, realizes what their intentions are, repairs his fleet, and makes ready for emergencies.

One Roman legion, separated from the others, is attacked by the Britons.

LIBER QUINTUS

RÉSUMÉ OF CHAPTERS 1-5

Caesar realizes on his return to Gaul that, for a successful invasion of Britain, he needs a large army and fleet. He gives instructions that they be made ready, and goes himself to quiet a threatened disturbance among the Treveri. Upon his return a fleet of 800 ships and five legions with 2000 cavalry are found ready.

RÉSUMÉ OF CHAPTERS 8-11

About the 20th of July B.C. 54 Caesar sets sail, and arrives in Britain on the next day. The Britons offer no objections to his landing, but, upon the Romans' advance inland, resistance is made, which proves unsuccessful. Caesar is compelled to return to his fleet because of news that his ships have been wrecked by a storm. While he is making repairs, the Britons unite against him.

LIBER SEXTUS

RÉSUMÉ OF CHAPTERS 1-10

During the winter Caesar levies more troops in order to be ready for the expected uprising of the Gauls. In the early spring he lays waste the territory of the Nervii, and the Senones and the Carnutes submit — all of whom previously refused to come to a conference of Gallic tribes which Caesar had called. He then proceeds against the Menapii in the north, who have never been subdued, and receives their submission. Meanwhile Labienus engages in battle with the Treveri, and they surrender. That he may frighten the Suebi, who plan to join the Treveri, Caesar again crosses the Rhine, but finds that they have retreated into the deep forests.

Customs of the Gauls. Two factions.

RÉSUMÉ OF CHAPTERS 29-34

Finding that the Suebi have withdrawn to the interior, Caesar returns to Gaul and marches against Ambiorix and the Eburones to punish them for slaying Sabinus and Cotta. Ambiorix eludes him and disbands his army. Caesar leaves Quintus Cicero in command of the baggage at Aduatuca, and, dividing the remainder of his army into three parts, goes in search of Ambiorix. Caesar invites other tribes to share with him in the plundering of the Eburones.

The Sugambri start out to obtain a share in plundering the Eburones, but instead they attack the camp which Caesar has left in Cicero's command.

35. Haec in omnibus Eburōnum partibus gerēbantur, diēsque appetēbat¹ septimus, quem ad diem Caesar ad impedimenta legiōnemque revertī cōstituerat. Hīc² quantum in bellō fortūna possit et quantōs afferat cāsūs

LIBER SEPTIMUS

RÉSUMÉ OF CHAPTERS 1-67

While Caesar is in Italy, the Carnutes and Arverni begin a revolt under Vercingetorix, who storms a city of the Boii called Gorgobina. Caesar returns from Italy with help. On the way he takes several towns and proceeds to Avaricum, a town which the Gauls have not burned because they think it impregnable to Caesar's attack. But the town is finally taken after a defense has been maintained for twenty-five days and 40,000 men, women, and children have been slain. Caesar thinks that this victory will destroy the compact against him that exists among the Gallic tribes, and so divides his army. But more states join Vercingetorix. Caesar himself goes to Gergovia, engages the Gauls, and suffers a heavy loss. The Haeduans immediately revolt and sack Noviodunum, one of their own towns, in which Caesar has placed provisions and hostages. Caesar nevertheless marches northward through the Haeduan territory to the Senones, and is joined by Labienus, who has just won a great victory at Lutetia.

Upon the revolt of the Haeduans, defection spreads to nearly all the Gallic tribes. A council of all Gaul is called, and Vercingetorix is named commander in chief. Caesar meanwhile sends to the Germans for cavalry, and starts out to defend the Province, which Vercingetorix has threatened. During this march, the Gauls make an attack on the Romans, but are defeated and pursued by the Romans to Alesia.

Vercingetorix retires to Alesia. Caesar pursues him and begins to build a wall.

68. Fugātō omni equitātū Vercingetorix cōpiās suās, ut prō castris collocāverat, redūxit prōtinusque Alesiam, quod est oppidum Mandubiōrum, iter facere coepit celeriterque impedimenta ex castris ēdūcī et sē subsequī iussit. Caesar, impedimentis in proximum collem ductis,

C. IULII CAESARIS
DE BELLO CIVILI
LIBER TERTIUS

The so-called First Triumvirate (B.C. 60), composed of Caesar, Crassus, and Pompey, was formed for the purpose of advancing the selfish interests of its members. Caesar wished to extend his power, Crassus to increase his wealth, Pompey to secure his hold on the East. With the help of Crassus and Pompey, Caesar was elected consul for the year B.C. 59. The Senate, influenced by Crassus and Pompey, voted that Caesar as proconsul should have as his province Gallia Cisalpina, Gallia Transalpina, and Illyricum, with an army of four legions — an arrangement that was to hold good for five years.

Caesar thereupon set out to subdue Gaul, the narrative of which he has given us in his Commentaries on the Gallic War. The five-year period proved too short for the purpose, and hence an additional five years was granted, while Spain was allotted to Pompey, and Syria to Crassus. Pompey remained at Rome and governed his province through trusted lieutenants. Crassus proceeded to Syria, where he was killed in battle, B.C. 53.

Caesar's proconsulship was to expire at the end of B.C. 49, and wishing to stand for his second consulship in that year, he had arranged with Pompey that he should candidate for the office even though absent from the city. But Pompey, growing jealous of Caesar's marked success in Gaul and Britain, joined the aristocratic (senatorial) party and induced the Senate to decree that Caesar should lay down his command and return to Rome as a private citizen some months before the expiration of his second five-year term.

Knowing that he would not be safe at Rome, where Pompey was in supreme command, Caesar refused to obey, and taking but a single legion, crossed the Rubicon, which bounded his province, and marched towards Rome. Thus the Civil War was begun. As he advanced, many cities submitted, while Pompey, dismayed at this evidence of Caesar's power, hastened to Brundisium and thence to Macedonia.

Caesar turned his attention to his enemies in the West. With Spain, Sicily, Sardinia, and Italy won, he returned to Rome and assumed the dictatorship, to which he had been appointed in his absence.

At this point the following selections take up the story.

Caesar is elected consul.

LIFE AND WORKS OF CORNELIUS NEPOS

OF the life and works of Cornelius Nepos, little is positively known. He was born in the town of Ticinum (Pavia) in Northern Italy, about B.C. 100. He died about B.C. 24. That he was well-to-do is evident from the fact that he was enrolled as a Roman knight, and he seems to have given his attention to literature and learning rather than to politics. Among his intimate friends were Cicero, Catullus, and Atticus.

It is clear that Nepos was a prolific writer, for we learn from various sources that he was the author of (a) an outline of the world's history; (b) a treatise on Roman customs; (c) a detailed life of Cato the Censor; (d) a life of Cicero; (e) a work on geography; (f) De Viris Illustribus. The last-named was divided into sixteen sections, as follows: — I. De Regibus Exterarum Gentium. II. De Regibus Romanorum. III. De Excellentibus Ducibus Exterarum Gentium. IV. De Excellentibus Ducibus Romanorum. V. De Iuris Consultis Graecis. VI. De Iuris Consultis Romanis. VII. De Oratoribus Graecis. VIII. De Oratoribus Romanis. IX. De Poetis Graecis. X. De Poetis Latinis. XI. De Historicis Graecis. XII. De Historicis Latinis. XIII. De Philosophis Graecis. XIV. De Philosophis Latinis. XV. De Grammaticis Graecis. XVI. De Grammaticis Latinis. Of these, one has been preserved entire — De Excellentibus Ducibus Exterarum Gentium — and parts of two others — De Regibus Exterarum Gentium and De Historicis Latinis. From the first most of the following selections have been chosen and from the last the life of Cato.

The style of Nepos, though of the same period as that of Caesar and Cicero, shows some peculiarities of construction. As a writer he should be considered as an essayist rather than as a historian. His Lives are models of literary form rather than of historical accuracy.

WORD FORMATION

Many Latin words are made up from other words :

- A. By appending certain endings ;
- B. By joining one word to another.

A. BY APPENDING CERTAIN ENDINGS

1. Nouns derived from verb stems by adding :

- a. -tor (-sor), denoting agency ; as vic (vincō, conquer) + -tor (denoting agent) = victor, one who conquers, conqueror.
- b. -tiō (-siō) and -tus (-sus), gen. -ūs, denoting an action going on ; as, profec (proficīscor, start out) + -tiō (denoting action) = profectiō, a starting out, departure ; and as, adven (adveniō, approach) + -tus (denoting action) = adventus, coming, arrival.

2. Nouns derived from nouns and adjectives by adding :

- ia, -itia, -tās, -tūs, -tūdō, denoting abstract quality ; as, audāc (audāx, bold) + -ia (denoting quality) = audācia, boldness.
- amīc (amīcus, friendly) + -itia (denoting quality) = amīcitia, friendship.
- līber (līber, free) + -tās (denoting quality) = lībertās, freedom.
- vir (vir, man) + -tūs (denoting quality) = virtūs, manliness, courage.
- magn(i) (magnus, great) + -tūdō (denoting quality) = magnitūdō, greatness.

B. BY JOINING ONE WORD WITH ANOTHER

1. Words with prefixes which have a meaning of their own :

- ā, ab, abs, away, from ; as, ā-mittō, send away.
- ad (ac, ā, ap, at), to, toward, at, on, near ; as, ad-dūcō, lead toward.
- ante, before ; as, ante-ferō, carry before, prefer.
- circum, around ; as, circum-dūcō, lead or carry around.

cum (com, con, col, co), together, with; as, com-portō, bring together: completely, thoroughly; as, com-moveō, move thoroughly.

dē, from; as, dē-cēdō, go away from.

ē, ex (ef), out from, forth: as, ē-dūcō, lead forth: completely; as, ef-ficiō, do completely.

in (im, ir, il), in, into, at, on, against; as, in-colō, live in; in-ferō, bring against.

inter, between; as, inter-pōnō, put between.

ob (o, obs, oc, of, og, op), against; as, oc-currō, run against.

per, through; as, per-dūcō, lead through: thoroughly; as, per-terreō, frighten thoroughly.

prae, in front of; as, prae-ficiō, place at the head of.

prō (prōd), forth, before; as, prō-cēdō, go forth.

sub (su, subs, suc, suf, sup), under, down; as, sub-eō, go under.

trāns (trān, trā), across; as, trā-dūcō, lead across.

2. Words with prefixes which have not an independent meaning:

dis (dī, dif, dir), apart, between; as, dī-mittō, send apart.

red (re), back, again; as, re-mittō, send back.

3. Nouns and adjectives with prefixes which have not an independent meaning:

in, not, un-: as, in-crēdibilis, unbelievable.

Frequentative or Intensive Verbs denote repeated or earnest action. They are formed by adding -tō (-sō) to supine stems; as, iac (iacio, throw) + -to (denoting repetition) = iactō, throw often.
